"His Check Came Back"

NOTHING undermines a man's credit more than to have that happen. Even tho an error, it's a signal that something is wrong with the man's finances. Folks hesitate to accept his check again. The notation "not sufficient funds" has given a blacey.

We dislike to return the checks, but we can't legally pay them with funds that belong to someone else. You know the money—its really property of our depositors who have left it here for safekeeping. We must be prepared to give it back to them when they ask for it. Keep a liberal deposit all the time. Then you'll know your check is always good.

Drunken Father Is Shot By Son

Terre Haute, Ind., Oct. 3.—After he had made threats of death to his wife and seven children in several drunken escapades, Charles Fox, 45, living between Terre Haute and Clinton was shot and killed Sunday night by his oldest son, Charles Fox, Jr., 14, after Fox had disregarded the pleas and warnings of his family to stay away from home while he was drunk.

The son warned his father to stay away when he came home drunk at 12:30 o'clock Sunday morning. Charles, according to the stories of all members of the family, came into the room and said to his father, "Do not come into this house or I'll shoot you." The father brandished a razor and started toward his wife, Mrs. Grace Fox, who seized her three-months-old baby and hid behind a bed. Charles, Jr., pulled the trigger of the shot gun which he held. The shot took effect between the left eye and the left ear, bringing instant death.

The boy was not held pending investigation. Sheriff Foncanon said he was already familiar with the circumstances of Fox' actions and had occasion several times before to interfere with him.

Jackie Coogan In "Johnny Get Your Hair Cut"

Jackie Coogan, that mysteriously gifted child, has brought to the screen a new characterization which marks the dividing line between the young genius' babyhood and boyhood. The news of the shearing of Jackie's locks was doubtless attended by the regret of his millions of feminine admirers, but they need have no cause for apprehension—Jackie Coogan is not lost to them. The tonsorial metamorphosis of Jackie Coogan is a radiant surprise as you will see at the Broadlands opera house on Saturday night, October 8th, where "Johnny Get Your Hair Cut," is to be shown.

The story is that of an orphaned son of an erstwhile trainer of thoroughbred race horses. On the death of his father the youngster makes his way across the country in a horse car to the California tracks where he tries to obtain a position as an apprentice jockey. With all the ingenuity of a determined adolescent Jackie works his way into the confidence of "Mother Slapp," a kindly woman who keeps a boarding house for jockeys. He meets Pop Slocum, a derelict of the race track who owns a horse, and the two enter into a pact. The events which lead up to the big race are full of mischief and fun with Jackie ever present on the screen.

Sights Of Springfield

The most noteworthy thing in Springfield is Lincoln's monument. It is the mecca of all visitors in Springfield and well repays the trouble of driving or walking out to the cemetery. The entrance to the cemetery is beautiful and gravel roadways run up to the tomb of Lincoln. The monument has an imposing aspect and a person feels the awe customary to such memorials erected for famous men. The main entrance faces south and we go in thru a short hallway into the main part of the monument.

The custodians are an old couple, who will gladly tell you anything you wish to know concerning Lincoln. When you first come in, you are supposed to register in an enormous book. Nearby one sees leaves of this book bearing the signatures of such noted persons as Lindbergh, Queen Marie, Marshal Foch, presidents and many others. Then we are led between cases with glass sides, containing innumerable articles connected with Lincoln's life. There we find pieces off of his furniture, pottery, clothes, of the log cabin where he was born, some of his school papers and other things too numerous to mention. There are pictures of Lincoln everywhere, some of him only and where Lincoln is the center of attention. One thing that was found were the newspapers of that time, especially those of this assassination. They were yellowed, but it is interesting to picture the consternation and horror caused by those headlines. A great many articles dealing with the chief executive's tragic death are found and the old custodian has an interesting account of this event, which he especially likes to tell to old veterans of the Union army. Lack of space and time prevent me from detailing any more of the many interesting things in this memorial, but all who live anywhere near Springfield should by all means go and view these things.

Then we proceed to the north entrance and there thru barred doors, we may look upon the last resting place of our martyred president. We see a large room containing many beautiful and costly wreaths. Below the center of this room the body of Lincoln is placed thirteen feet below the floor, surrounded by solid concrete of enormous thickness on all sides. This has been done because of repeated attempts to steal the body. We then go up a flight of steps and come out on a balcony which surrounds the shaft of the monument. We then climbed a narrow, dark, winding stairs and after a long time, reached the top of the shaft. There is about room for two persons at the top at one time, and one gets a good view of Springfield from the small round holes near the top. However, it is not advisable to go up there when a large crowd is at hand, for there is scarcely room to pass on the stairs.

The next thing to visit is the Capitol building. It is a beautiful and stately building when viewed from the outside. This combination is very well carried out inside the building, especially in the dome; its height very nearly makes one dizzy if only viewed from the bottom, and what effect would be secured from the top can be left to the imagination. As a rule the visitor is only allowed to go as far as the fourth floor. After viewing the various rooms, it is of interest to view the legislative rooms, which are patterned after those at Washington, D. C.

When thru looking over the Capitol building, it is advisable to take the tunnel over to the Centennial building, which as its name indicates, was built to celebrate the hundred years anniversary of Illinois as a state. This building is devoted to things taken from Illinois. About the only thing of interest on the main floor is a long gallery containing the regimental flags of the Illinois troops from various wars. The greatest majority of them come from the Civil War and the World War.

Then we proceeded to the third floor where the main exhibits are shown. About the biggest room is devoted to mounted birds and their eggs. Probably every wild fowl of the United States is to be found here, and many others that hail from far distant parts of the world. These birds and fowls are excellently prepared and usually placed in a natural position. In another room we found the various fish, snakes, and other animals found in the rivers, lakes and streams of Illinois. Some very interesting specimens were those of the Murphysboro cyclone disaster, showing various trees with slender boards driven completely through them. Other things showed the freakish effects on trees, buildings, etc., by the cyclone. We next came to a room in which relics of ancient civilization in Illinois were shown. There were strange, crude weapons and other things showing a very crude civilization. Perhaps one of the most interesting parts in this department was that showing remains and traces of gigantic animals that formerly inhabited this state in very early times. The room that was perhaps best fitted out was that containing Indian relics. These articles were sheer innumerable and attracted large crowds. I really believe that it would be hard to find any article used by the Indians that is not found here. A department that would perhaps interest some is the one containing the minerals of Illinois, but the long and unpronounceable names soon caused me to beat a retreat.

After viewing these and many other articles, we went into the basement where some of the former wild life of Illinois was shown in its natural surroundings. No pains had been spared to secure exact imitation of places and natural position of the animals. The effect was truly startling, for one could almost see these animals moving and a group of pumas were especially well shown.

When we were at Springfield, we also took in the State Fair, but since nearly everyone has been there at one time or another I will bore no one by recounting my experiences.

CHILD WHO ISN'T MUSICAL A MYTH

John Phillip Sousa Would Provide Lessons for Every Youngster.

There is no such thing as a child who "isn't musical." And every youngster ought to have the same chance to learn music that he gets to learn reading, writing and arithmetic. So says John Phillip Sousa, dean of band directors, in response to the question put to him by the Conn Music Center, "What about the child who isn't musical?"

"In the half century of my musical career, thousands of parents have asked me, 'Should my child study music?'" explains the great bandmaster. "Without asking a single question about the child, I always answer, 'Yes.'"

"No matter whether a youngster thinks he doesn't like music, or hasn't any ear for music, he should have an opportunity for musical instruction. As a matter of fact, the very child who thinks he can't learn music, goes along the street humming or whistling a popular tune. He is probably chock-full of music, but he doesn't know it. "Every child, I believe, is capable of learning music. And no matter whether he becomes an accomplished musician, or just learns to play a little, once he has learned to listen to music and understand it, his life has become enriched.

"The real test of the value of a musical education is this: No one I ever heard of, who has had a musical education, has regretted it. And almost every one I have talked to who cannot play the simplest air on the simplest instrument admits he is sorry he didn't learn more about music when he had the opportunity."

Outlive Puritan Idea.

The Puritans, avers Sousa, branded the musician as a "sissy." These old Pilgrim Fathers had no use for any music except the solemn and sonorous church hymns. They considered any musician a trifling, foppish idler. It has taken America hundreds of years to outlive that idea, but today the musician takes his place as a capable business man. Many college athletes, whom no one would think of calling "sissy," play the piano, mandolin or saxophone.

"Men are outstripping women in the world of music," says Sousa. "But the ladies will catch up," he prophesies. "Women are just as capable of expressing themselves in music as men, and their sense of appreciation is often greater. It is the present vogue for snappy dance music and stirring military airs—dominantly man-music—which has given the boys the edge on their sisters in the present day."

PASSING OF LONG SKIRTS LEADING GIRLS INTO BANDS

The short skirt has enabled women to enter one more sphere which heretofore has been regarded as inhabited solely by the stronger sex. In seeking an explanation for the large number of girls' bands springing up in various parts of the country, the Conn Music Center finds a number of authorities give the long sweeping skirt, now passe, as the chief cause for women's exclusion from playing in bands and marching in parades.

"Long, sweeping skirts made women figures of fun as they marched along the streets," says Miss Marguerite Stocking, instructor in music in the Elgin (Ill.) schools, where a thriving girls' band is prominent among school activities. "With the sensible short, but not tight, skirts of today, a girl may march along the street playing an instrument and still be perfectly graceful and womanly. In fact, it is astonishing to see how a girl's carriage improves after she has learned to play on parade. Girls in the awkward, self-conscious stage, gain poise and self-possession and dignity through playing in the band."

"Not only that, but they are better musicians now that loose and freeing clothes permit them to take the full, deep breathing that playing a wind instrument demands."

Smile Awhile

What, married? Don't make me laugh, stupid. How did you ever get a wife?

I just sobered up and there she was.

Fred: It is said that paper can be used effectively in keeping a person warm.

Ned: Yes; I remember a 30-day note once kept me in a sweat for a month.

I hear there's a new baby at your house, William, the teacher said to a pupil.

I don't think so, replied the boy. The way he cries sounds to me like he's had a lot of experience.

Busy, blustering business man to steno as phone rings: Take the message and I'll get it from you later.

Steno: Your little girl wants to send you a kiss over the telephone.

Darling, she said breathlessly, one feels as we speed along that life is really and truly worth living.

Yes, he replied, and judging from the way the pedestrians dodge us, they feel that way, too.

Auntie—Do you ever play with bad little boys, Willie?

Willie—Yes, Auntie.

Auntie—I'm surprised. Why don't you play with good little boys?

Willie—Their mothers won't let me.

The airman was explaining the use of the parachute to a group of sightseers.

And what would happen if the parachute failed to open after you jumped off? asked a listener.

Oh, that wouldn't stop me! replied the airman. I'd come down just the same.

A young lawyer, pleading his first case, had been retained by a farmer to prosecute a railway company for killing 24 hogs. He wanted to impress the jury with the magnitude of the injury.

Twenty-four hogs, gentlemen.

Twenty-four hogs, gentlemen.

Twenty-four; twice the number in the jury box.

A sportsman with a wonderful power of imagination was telling how at one shot he had bagged two partridges and a rabbit. His explanation was that, though he had hit only one partridge, the bird in falling had clutched another partridge and brought that to the earth entangled in its claws. But how about the rabbit? He was asked.

Oh, was the calm reply, my gun kicked and knocked me over and I fell on the rabbit as it ran past.

Sister Brown had been testifying at the weekly prayer meetings of the waywardness of her daughter who would rather go to dances than to church. This had been going on for weeks in spite of the feeble protests of her husband. Finally at one of these prayer meetings she arose with new testimony. She concluded thus:

And now that my daughter is going to be married, this burden has been lifted from my shoulders and placed on that of a man. I am so happy that if I had one more feather in my wings I would fly to heaven.

But in the general chorus of "Amens," no one heard the mutterings of her husband, who grunted:

Oh, Lord, stick it in her and let her fly.

Elsie Sweetin Freed By Jury

Mt. Vernon, Ill., Sept. 24.—After almost three years in the penitentiary where she was serving a 35 year sentence on charge of poisoning her husband, Mrs. Elsie Sweetin was set free here this afternoon by a jury of Jefferson county farmers.

For almost two weeks the jury heard testimony and arguments concerning Mrs. Sweetin's alleged love affair with the Rev. Lawrence Hight and the subsequent deaths of Wilford Sweetin, her husband, and Mrs. Hight, his wife.

The verdict was returned after 35 minutes of deliberation.

Convicted on Christmas eve, 1924, Hight was sentenced to serve life and Mrs. Sweetin, 35 years. But Mrs. Sweetin continued her fight for freedom and won a new trial from the supreme court on the ground that she should have been tried separately.

Hight was brought here last Sunday as a state's witness but instead helped Mrs. Sweetin in her defense. He supported her testimony that he caused her to confess falsely that she had poisoned her husband in a love pact with him, by arousing in her fear of mob violence after her arrest.

Snake Kills Child While It's Imprisoned

Juliette, Ga., Sept. 26.—Locked in a dark clothes closet for punishment by her mother, the three year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Gunn was found dead with a snake wrapped around her throat and her tongue half eaten away when the door was opened.

Mrs. Gunn locked the little girl in the closet to teach her obedience because of her misbehavior.

"Something's after me!" The child shrieked after being locked in the closet for several minutes. Opening the door, Mrs. Gunn found the little girl on the floor, a huge coach-whip snake wrapped tightly in two folds about her throat, its head in the child's mouth.

Neighbors, answering the hysterical screams of the mother, called a nearby physician, he found the child dead, her tongue half bitten away by the snake, having swollen so large that it had filled the cavity of the mouth and throat, causing death by suffocation.

Schools Keynote to "Musical America"

Elkhart, Ind.—The musical future of America rests in its public schools, in the opinion of George Dasch, conductor of the Little Symphony orchestra of Chicago. Contributing to a symposium on school music taken up by the Conn Music Center here, Mr. Dasch wrote: "I know of no agency that can do more for a musical America than these schools. Not only will our symphony orchestras of tomorrow be recruited from the ranks of these embryo musicians of today, but our concert halls will be filled with men and women who gained a sound insight into good music while they were students in our high schools."

Recently I mingled with 1,000 youngsters in a hall where I was judging a high school orchestra contest. I have never heard more wholesome conversation. I heard those orchestras discussed with an air of understanding that astounded me. I discovered that these high school students were as interested in their orchestras and bands as they were in their football and baseball teams. It was a conversation that spoke volumes for the musical America of the future."

Find Music Study Aid to Character

Elkhart, Ind.—The building of character is the most important function of music in college life, in the opinion of college executives included in a survey made by the Conn Music Center here. The survey revealed that it is the almost unanimous sentiment of the college heads and heads of college musical departments that this aspect of music is the greatest justification for its inclusion in their school work.

While laying great stress on the benefits of musical training in moulding the character of college youth, the college executives pointed out that music is also an advantage to the college student in other ways. The cultural benefits afforded, they placed next to character building in value, and mental training came third. Other advantages given were music as development of social qualities, as a factor for health, and an opportunity of putting the student through school. All but three of the colleges in the survey reported their musically trained pupils more efficient than those not so trained. Music on the campus as an outlet for surplus energy was mentioned by a number of college heads.

Forty-six per cent of the colleges have band and orchestra work as a part of their school curriculum, the survey showed. The colleges also reported that 40 per cent of all the outstanding students, student leaders, class presidents, etc., were playing some sort of a musical instrument.

What The Red Cross Is Doing

All Red Cross branches in the county are interested in the work of the Champaign County chapter and also in that of the national organization which they are supporting. Here is what is going on in the county this month. The ladies in the Volunteer Service of the Red Cross are making baby layettes and underclothing for the children in the insular possessions and are knitting children's sweaters for the Near East. The need for garments in these possessions is desperate. Many children in these places cannot go to school because they have no clothing. It is a common thing for tiny babies to die of pneumonia because there was no clothing for them and they were wrapped in newspaper.

The Red Cross sent 250 letters to teachers in the county concerning the enrollment in the Junior Red Cross. At present the Junior work consists of filling Christmas boxes to be sent to children in foreign lands. Last year Champaign county sent out five hundred of such boxes. Later in the season the Juniors will be helping to make Christmas merry for the unfortunate children of Champaign County.

The usual work of the Home Service Department is continuing. This work consists of aiding veterans who are ill in securing compensation, pensions, and insurance from the government and of visiting and aiding financially the families of veterans confined to hospitals. The annual meeting of the Champaign County Red Cross will be held on Sunday, Oct. 9, 1927, at 2:30 in the Chapter office located in the basement of the Urbana Library building, Urbana. Every Red Cross member is urged to attend and to take active part in the meeting.

Music Students Get Best Grades

Survey in Washington High Schools Proves Music an Asset.

More music, better grades—is the way they do it in the high schools of the nation's capital, reports the Conn Music Center, working in the interests of a more musical America. Students in the Washington (D. C.) high schools taking instrumental music range 2.1 per cent more in their studies than do the boys and girls who do not.

There are five high schools in Washington. Four of them—McKinley Technical, Eastern, Western and Business high schools—were used as the basis of an investigation made by Dr. Edwin N. C. Barnes, director of music education in the Washington public schools. The survey was based on the reports of the two senior classes in these schools and is described in detail in Doctor Barnes' new book, "Music an Education and Social Asset," just published by the Theodore Presser company of Philadelphia.

It was found that no less than 16 per cent of these senior students were studying some musical instrument or had been studying it within the past three years. They had each had on an average, 108.8 lessons on the instrument of their choice, and had carried this extra work in addition to the regularly prescribed high school subjects. Instead of tending to lower their grades as a distraction, the grades of the fiddlers and saxophone players were appreciably higher, ranging from 1.3 points to 4.5 points above those of the students who had not carried this additional work.
