Cultivation

"Aye the corn, the royal corn, within whose yellow heart is of health and strength for all the nations."
—Gov. Oglesby.

CORN planted in the ground and properly cultivated yields a good return.

It is just the same with your money.

When you plant it in the bank and cultivate it by regularly adding to it, your balance will grow and grow, and yield that which will protect you and yours and bring happiness and comforts to you.

The Home Paper

Men everywhere are coming more and more to understand and appreciate the influence of the rural press in the affairs of this country.

Only a few years ago we were told that the local newspaper was passing—that it could not compete with the dailies of the big cities—and that it must yield to the inevitable.

But the prophets were wrong. It is true that the local daily or weekly paper cannot supply in detail all of the news of the world. It cannot compete with its city contemporary in illustrations and features.

And yet the local paper is still with us and it is growing in strength and usefulness as the years go by. Some of the reasons for its existence are summed up in this paragraph from an exchange.

The local paper should be found in every home. No children should grow up ignorant who can be taught to appreciate the home paper. It is said to be the strongest stepping stone of intelligence in all those matters not to be found in books. Give your children a foreign paper which contains not a word about any person, place, or thing which they have seen, or perhaps ever even heard of, and how could you expect them to be interested? But let them have the home paper and read of people whom they meet and of places with which they are familiar and soon an interest is awakened which increases with every arrival of the local paper. Thus a habit of reading is formed and those children will read the papers all their lives and become intelligent men and women, a credit to their ancestors and strong in the knowledge of the world as it is today.

Danville Incorporates California Signals

The city council has determined to incorporate the so-called California system of street signaling in the traffic ordinance of the city. It will thus be made compulsory and every driver will be expected to use these signals when making turns or stops. This system of signals is believed to be the simplest that has been devised, but the value of any system depends upon the number of drivers who use it. The California system is more generally used than any other, and for this reason strangers coming to the city will not be confused by a multiplicity of signals that may mean nothing at all to them. A uniform system of signals will eliminate a very large percentage of street accidents and will make street traffic far more agreeable than when signals are misunderstood. The California system to be in force in Danville consists of three signals as follows: The left arm extended downward means a full stop; the left arm extended straight out means a left turn; the left arm extended upward means a right turn. They are simple, easy of execution and instantly understood. Let every driver adopt them at once.—Commercial News.

Prof. Morton Hood Was Correspondent For Echo

Prof. and Mrs. Morton Hood, who visited the former's sister, Mrs. J. L. Catlett here several days last week, left last Friday for a week's visit with relatives at Tuscola, after which they will visit relatives in Missouri and Oklahoma before returning home.

While here Mr. Hood informed us that his home town, Logan, Okla., had been completely destroyed by a cyclone since he left there, the storm occurring on June 14th.

After teaching school at Longview, Homer, Rantoul, Danville and other Illinois towns for many years, Mr. Hood took Greeley's advice and went west, teaching in Wyoming during the World's war.

While teaching at Longview, Mr. Hood was correspondent for the Broadlands Echo of which John Kenney was the publisher. At that time there were three doctors at Longview, Dr. Pigg, Dr. Ratts and Dr. Shurtz. When Dr. Pigg arrived at Longview, Mr. Hood sent the Echo an item which read: Dr. Pigg is now stopping at the Williams hotel. In setting the item into type the printer, intentionally or otherwise, made the item read: Dr. Pigg is now "slopping" at the Williams Hotel. The item not only created fun for the readers of the Echo, but peevied the proprietors of the hotel as well. Prof. Geo. H. Cook of Broadlands was one of Mr. Hood's pupils at that time. Mr. Hood taught school for 42 years.

Mr. and Mrs. Hood own and reside on a wheat and cattle ranch comprising 320 acres, four miles from Logan, Okla.

Urbana To Celebrate The 4th of July

An old-fashioned Fourth of July celebration is being planned at Urbana for Wednesday of next week and the entertainment includes an all day program of races at the Fair Grounds, the opening of Urbana's fine new swimming pool from 10 a. m., to 10 p. m. and a mammoth display of fireworks at Crystal Lake park at 7:45 o'clock. Last year 30,000 were thrilled with the fireworks display, so arrangements are being made to accommodate another large crowd. Special traffic rules will prevail and every effort will be made to accommodate the large number of visitors.

Alfred Watkins will be in charge of the events at the Fair Grounds and will feature pony races, horseshoe pitching, contests and athletic events during the morning. Four horse races, two dog races, and a half-mile running race, featuring women drivers will constitute the afternoon program, which begins at 2 o'clock at the Fair Grounds. There will be dancing both afternoon and evening at this place.

The park will be open all day and many picnic parties are being planned in connection with attendance at the various events offered at Urbana. Last year Broadlands, Longview and this part of Champaign County was well represented at Urbana's celebration and indications are that a larger crowd will be there this year.

Hailed Their Leader as More Than Human

Capt. John Nicholson, hero of the suppression by the British of the Sepoy revolt in India, was worshipped as a god by the royal sikh. At his side, ready to his hand, hung the finest sword in the land, selected by sikh leaders after months of searching and intricate tests. Often a native, overcome with the conviction that Nicholson was divine, would prostrate himself in adoration, although the penalty for this offense was three dozen lashes.

He ruled his troops with an iron hand, and once ordered nine conspirators to be blown from the mouths of cannons into the faces of the men of a regiment that had threatened to rebel. It was said, however, that he would go into his tent and weep following such measures.

Nicholson was mortally wounded at Delhi in the engagement which led to the capture of that city by the British. Far off in the hills the Nicholson fakirs, a tribe that had made him their only god, heard of his death. Two chiefs killed themselves that they might serve him in another world, while the third led his tribesmen to the Christian teachers at Peshawur to be baptized.—Detroit News.

Science Can't Explain Variations in Brains

The brains of the great do not vary so greatly from those of the common variety as was once believed. Post-mortem examination of the brains of G. Stanley Hall, eminent psychologist; Sir William Osler, for many years an outstanding figure in the field of medicine, and Edward S. Morse, widely known naturalist and zoologist, did not show striking variations from the normal, Dr. Henry H. Donaldson of the Wistar Institute of Anatomy and Biology told members of the National Academy of Sciences. They were, however, slightly heavier than the brains of more nearly average individuals studied for comparison. "The variations in the form of the convolutions," said Doctor Donaldson, "may mean something but they do not explain that for which explanation is sought, for in their fundamental structure human brains are remarkably alike, and the variations in the convolutions are incidental, as the several measurements show."

No Picnic

Clustered round the tram stopping place were a number of small children accompanied by a woman.

A tramcar pulled up and they all got on.

When the conductor came along to collect the fares, he counted the children. There were twelve.

Excuse me, madam, he ventured, but are these all yours or is it a picnic?

Unusual Request

A well-dressed boy, about five years old, approached a man who was standing at the curb. "Will you watch me across the street, please?" the boy asked pleasantly.

The man was puzzled for a moment. Then he understood.

"Oh, you want me to see that you get across safely. Sure!"
There were no moving vehicles within two blocks, but the man accompanied the youngster across the "danger" zone. The opposite curb reached, the boy said, "Thank you," and marched off—to grow up, presumably, into a man who calls regularly on friends of the family and asks plain girls to dance.—Baltimore Sun.

Light Rays Echo Finders

The acoustic defects of a London hall were recently located and remedied by the use of an echo finder, which consists of a beam of light and an electric spark gap, both mounted on the same bowl-shaped reflector. As the beam is moved around the hall, shot first on one place and then another, such portions of the interior as have the faculty of reflecting the sound are detected by means of a chattering in the instrument. When located steps are taken to overcome the echo.

Forgetful Auntie

Sammy came down for breakfast one morning looking rather scared. He had had a most unpleasant dream, which he began to recount to the family at great length.

He had reached an exciting stage, and his voice had sunk to an impressive whisper, when he stopped short and demanded of his aunt: "And what came next, auntie?"

The lady looked puzzled. "How should I know, Sammy?" she asked. "Why," said Sammy indignantly, "you were there, weren't you?"

Domain of Certainty

The domain of mathematics is the sole domain of certainty. There and there alone prevail the standards by which every hypothesis respecting the external universe and all observations and all experiments must finally be judged. It is the realm to which all speculation and all thought must repair for chastening and sanitation—the court of last resort. I say it reverently, for all intellectuality whatsoever of demon or man or deity—From Keyser's "Universe and Beyond."

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON BUILDING AN INCOME

As Aunt Emmy came out of the savings bank she met young George Oliver.

"Well, well," he said, "it's funny to see you coming out of a savings bank, Aunt Emmy. I thought only poor folks like me had money in savings banks—people like you just clip coupons!"

"Have you a savings bank account?" countered Aunt Emmy.

"Well, er—I suppose I haven't," he admitted. "You see, it's hard to save money when you're first married. Somehow there never seems to be enough money to go 'round—let alone to put in a savings bank."

"You never will have if you don't get started," interrupted Aunt Emmy. "You should make your weekly savings deposit, no matter how small, the first claim on your salary after paying your bills. I make my weekly deposit in this bank faithfully—I put away a certain sum regularly."

"You can!" Nat commented.

"It is more a habit than you would suppose," Aunt Emmy continued. "Any one can do it who is willing to let other things wait. I began putting a little money in a savings bank years ago when it was no joke to save a few pennies. I remember what a wonderful thrill I got the first time I saw my interest entered in my bank book. There was money that my money had earned all by itself. After that it was a sort of game with me to put a certain sum in the bank, even if I had to do without things I would have enjoyed having. Now I realize what it means to keep your money busy earning all the time so I continue to put a little in the savings bank regularly and, after it accumulates, I draw some out and invest in safe securities that pay a higher rate of interest than savings. All the time, you see, the money is working for me."

"Of course, when the sum is small, it earns little, but if you start young, as you and Molly are, it is almost like magic the way it mounts up after a few years—then when your savings get grown up into a real investment they earn a real income."

"I never thought of it in that light," said George.

"Try it—and see for yourself how it works," urged Aunt Emmy. "Have you ever thought how nice it would be to have a few dollars ready for use in case of an emergency? Accidents and illnesses do happen. Or suppose you had an opportunity to buy something you knew you could sell at a profit and you had to let the opportunity slip for the lack of a few hundred dollars. You and Molly would never miss five dollars a week—and if you keep at it, it will work wonders!"

"You're right, it would!" exclaimed George. "I'll talk to Molly tonight, Aunt Emmy, and see if we can't revise our expenditures."

"There would be a whole lot less family trouble and worry over money matters if every young couple did the same thing early in life," Aunt Emmy said. "Start young," is the magic slogan."

Cecilia's Dreams of Career

By EDGAR T. MONFORT

(Copyright.)

"THE performance at the high school auditorium last night was a brilliant success. The outstanding artist on the program was Miss Cecilia Gray, whose bell-like soprano voice was at its best and loveliest. We forecast a great future for this talented young lady and only regret that her career may take her away from us to some metropolitan center, Chicago or New York, where she can get a position worthy of her great talent. We feel safe in predicting that grand opera goes will some day know the name of Cecilia."

Cecilia simply could not read any further. Her sweet girlish face was suffused with color as she let the paper fall on the table and clasped her hands in ecstasy. The broom with which she had been sweeping the dining room when the paper came, leaned against the table beside her—forgotten. Even her surroundings seemed to recede and in her imagination she gazed over a sea of upturned worshipping faces. Her head roared with the sound of the applause and she felt herself moving slowly, regally to the front and graciously acknowledging it. Then she started to sing a silence settled over the audience that was almost deathlike.

From the minute she read the newspaper notice she had a different attitude toward herself. She felt the responsibility of her talent and the necessity for her to sacrifice home and loved ones to pursue her career.

"It's a gift," she told Joe Watson, her beau, "a gift that was given me by the Creator. I am destined to have a career."

Her young face looked so pathetically serious and Joe's so pathetically tragic as they sat side by side on the shabby old sofa.

"Where do I come in?" he asked, suddenly frightened as a new idea dawned on him.

"But don't you see, dear, this is something I'm not responsible for. It's a call I must answer like a soldier's call to war or a minister's to preach. Don't you understand?"

"No!" said Joe savagely. "I'm darned if I do. There's no call greater than the call to marry a decent man when you've already pledged yourself."

"You wouldn't hold me to that?" she asked in surprise.

"Oh, no, not at all. A little matter like that is nothing when it comes to a career," he answered, but his sarcasm was completely lost on Cecilia who threw her arms around his neck.

"Ah, I knew you'd see it. And I do love you, Joe; it means a lot to me to give you up."

She was sincere in what she said, but all the time that she was looking at Joe she was seeing herself holding her thousands spellbound.

Of course, when Clearview heard of her intended and approaching trip to New York the town went wild. Parties, entertainments of all sorts, more newspaper writeups of her wonderful talent, her great future. Mrs. Gray, at first sad at the idea of losing her daughter, soon began to swell with pride and cut down on expenses to save the fare to New York. Naturally as soon as Cecilia arrived she'd have wonderful openings offered her, but even the greatest talent must have railroad fare.

Within less than a month's time Cecilia had attended her last party, received her last gift and bade her last farewell. Reaching New York one cold winter evening she went straight to a Y. W. C. A. and after much pulling of wires she got a hearing with Signor Musanti, a teacher of moderate reputation but of great honesty. With confidence she started to sing a dramatic aria that had brought the house down at Clearview. For a second Musanti listened, then raised his hand.

"Stop!" he commanded, jumping up and pacing the floor angrily. "My God, why do you sing E when it should be F sharp? Haf you no ear? Why did you come here? Who sent you here to me? Why don't you try to be an acrobat? And that tremolo... My God, you sound like a nanny goat. Go home—go home quick and wash dishes—anything but sing."

At first Cecilia was too dazed to speak, she merely gaped at the little man, then after a moment the tears rushed into her eyes and she dropped into a chair and wept.

"There, there," he said in quick sympathy, patting her heaving shoulders. "It happens all the time. I know. A girl sings at some church festival at home. The local papers flatter her, she swallows it, friend's praise. She leaves home for a CAREER! Every week I get them. Now, buy a ticket and go home, back to your mamma and your sweetheart; he'll take you back. I haf another lesson."

Cecilia felt herself being gently put out the front door, but there was healing in his kindness. With a gulp she swallowed her pride, took his advice and went back home, but on the train a plan of action came to her. Just out of New York she sent a telegram to Joe Watson: "I'm coming back tomorrow on Number Sixteen. So home sick for you, Cecy."

And to this day Joe worships her for her devotion and she worships him for saving her pride. Only a few catty old maids sniff and doubt and there is just one word Cecilia avoids as if it were contaminated—Career.

Making the Discovery

"CHAFFEE, what's your idea about the way our inside figures have been leaking out into our competitor's hands?" Wilson asked his assistant bluntly.

Chaffee's keen, cold face hardened. "I have a mighty good idea—your secretary, Miss Curtis. I have been checking her back, and five years ago she was employed by the same gang."

Wilson was astonished. "You sure of that?"

"I am. There's no other way the facts could get out. I figure that she's a spy—planted here. Their business is up against it."

"Well, old man, thanks for looking into it. I'll have a chat with her," Wilson said slowly.

Hardly had Chaffee gone before Miss Curtis came in.

Wilson watched her—such a serene, contained little body. Could it be possible? From the day of her coming, she had been a ray of charm and brightness in the office where he was fighting to win a way through for his firm.

The worst of it was that he was thinking of asking her to go with him on some of his trips about the city.

The upshot of it was that he did ask her, and at the end of the week he was deeper in the problem. She fitted into his ways so perfectly that the trips became more of a pleasure than business; their lunches together became periods of keen enjoyment and relaxation; and, finally, in an unguarded moment, he said:

"I don't see how I can ever get along without you!"

Her gray, long-lashed eyes looked at him with a sudden light in them that went out in a moment, but it was a tender glance and it thrilled him. Alone later in his bachelor apartments realization came to him. He was beginning to fall in love with the girl who was without doubt playing him into the hands of his business enemies. There were just three who had access to the data: himself, Chaffee, and she—and Chaffee had proved his faithfulness.

When his next prices were underbid, he called her to him, and told her what had happened. She drew back, the rose going from her cheeks as she sensed his meaning:

"You don't think I—"

He felt an overwhelming desire to rush from his desk and gather her in comforting arms—she looked so slight, girlish, and her gray eyes were darkened with what seemed to be fears. But he checked himself even as he came to a final realization that he loved this dainty, attractive bit of womanhood in front of him.

"I was wondering if you could give me some suggestion as to—" awkwardly, "the source of the leak."

She backed away, her eyes searching his. "No," she said faintly, "I don't believe I can."

It was just before closing, and in a moment she had gone, leaving in the office a sense of something vacant and lonesome.

He pounded the desk. "I don't believe for a moment she is guilty. Hang it, I left her with the impression that I do. And I can't lose her—I can't," he added softly to himself.

But Chaffee had his simple explanation. "She's clever or she wouldn't be in such a game, and if she doesn't come back, you win."

She failed to return the next morning, but Wilson did not feel that he had won. Instead he determined that he would go to her home that evening and recapture her if he could. In the meantime, he would put a special investigator on another phase of the problem.

"I love her and I believe in her; that's final!" he decided.

The late afternoon mail brought him a brief note in which she explained that she was resigning her position. Wilson stared at the note. "Chaffee would say that this was a neat way of getting from under, but I miss her, and I need her!" His mood quiet. "And I love her!"

Just before closing time, Lacey, the investigator he had set at work came in smiling. "By checking the time element in your office routines, I have found the leak; charge it to Mr. Chaffee!"

Wilson was astounded. "But Chaffee accuses Miss Curtis!"

The other man smiled. "Miss Curtis has been giving Chaffee's advances an icy shoulder. He has bluffed you, Wilson. We advise you to get rid of him!"

"I will, Lacey, believe me! But before that, I must get something else off my mind!" Wilson announced, reaching for his hat.

A taxi carried him swiftly to the suburban section, and to a cottage on a side street. He rang the bell and waited, with his thoughts a bit confused but his purpose clear.

The door opened, and she was before him.

"May, Chaffee has been found to be the one, but that isn't the point. I want you to come back," he said hastily, and then added quietly: "I miss you so—I can't bear the thought of losing you!"

She caught her breath as she sensed his deeper meaning. "You shall have me if you want me, Dick—that is," she answered a bit hesitatingly, "if you really want me!"

"Really!" he repeated, but words were useless; so there was but one thing to do—and he did it.
