Automobiles Made While You Wait

One of the very unusual exhibits at the Chicago World's Fair is that of General Motors, housed in a vast building in which automobiles are made as fast as the hands can turn. The above picture is of special interest because the photograph was made by W. G. Stuber, president of the Eastman Kodak Company. He visited the exposition and toured the grounds as an amateur photographer.

Local and Personal

New Acid, New Vitamin Not the Same Brick Twice Astronomical Paradox Short Waves Kill Disease

A new acid has been identified, existing in every living thing, from men down to bacteria and molds; a strange substance that stimulates growth, "composed of long chains of carbon, hydrogen and oxygen."

It is so powerful that "one part in a billion," a very small drop in 250 gallons of water, is enough to affect the entire living body. It is called "panthothenic," meaning that it comes from everywhere.

If you know how to remove all traces of it from food you might breed dwarfs a few inches high and produce the fabulous "homunculus."

You are also told, and may safely believe, that carrots, fresh butter and other substances contain the most precious of vitamins, one that prevents colds or cures them when you have them. But don't try to live on raw carrots. Eat them well cooked. And don't force your children to eat them if they don't like them. What children don't like they can't digest, and other foods possess that vitamin. Only things we like cause the gastric juice to flow. No gastric juice, no digestion.

The late President Ripley of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe said: "The three important words in the language of success are organize, deputize, supervise."

That is wisdom. Another wise thing was said by another railroad man, A. J. County, one of General Atterbury's important associates on the Pennsylvania railroad: "This is a time to remember that you cannot get experience without paying for it. Paying for it is all right, if you don't pay too much, and if you don't buy the same gold brick twice."

Buying one gold brick, says Mr. County, quoting an old friend, is no sign that your mind is feeble. But buying the same gold brick over again proves that you are hopeless.

Sir Arthur Eddington, great British astronomer, bewilders you with this statement: "The earth is older than the universe itself." The universe, he believes, is 2,000,000,000 years old, and the earth is older than that probably.

Only a deep astronomer can understand how one grain of sand in the universe can be older than the universe.

The late Lord Kelvin said the age limit of the sun and earth could not be above 50,000,000 years. The high school child laughs at that estimate now and Eddington admits that future generations may laugh at his estimate. The universe is constantly expanding, according to Eddington, and if you deny that you "wreck the relativity theory and knock the bottom out of space."

It would be too bad to do either of those things.

Dr. Schliephake, sound German scientist, not a quack, tells the British Medical Journal that he has succeeded in treating deep-seated abscesses in the human body by passing ultra-short wireless waves through the patient, the latter not in contact with any instrument. With waves of varying lengths he has treated abscesses of the lungs, following pneumonia, peritonitis and other troubles.

Waves that you cannot see, attacking buried diseases, out of sight in the human body, create a new respect for science.

H. G. Wells' dream of a world with no crimes of violence and only a few thefts scattered here and there over the earth's surface is still far from realization. In Silesia recently a woman and her son were beheaded, by the ax, for the murder of her husband. The dispatch does not say whether the headman wore a dress suit, or whether, like the French headman who beheaded Catherine Howard, he first knelt with clasped hands before the victim to beg pardon for what he was about to do.

From New York's viaduct, at Riverside drive and One Hundred and Thirtieth street, a man plunged to death on the pavement of Twelfth avenue, seventy-five feet below. Mere plunging and dying would attract no attention, but this man was extremely well dressed and wore a diamond ring worth $1,000. To many it will seem strange that a man should kill himself while owning a ring worth $1,000. That measures part of our civilization.

The learned Professor Sherman says keeping old men alive and vigorous in old age is most important, because wisdom that comes with years will thereafter be active, instead of slowly dying away. The new diet will realize Plato's ideal of "an intellectual aristocracy" in which "philosophers will be kings, and kings will be philosophers."

The French, finding public legalized lotteries popular, start another. The idea is to "bring out some of the hoarded money," estimated as high as seventy thousand million francs, three and a half billions of our dollars. Frenchmen resist with difficulty the temptation to put hoarded money into a 100-franc ticket that may yield a five million-franc prize.

Lesson for September 24

REVIEW: SOME EARLY LEADERS OF ISRAEL

GOLDEN TEXT—Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Ephesians 6:10. PRIMARY TOPIC—Friends From God's Book.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Some Heroes of God's Book. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Lessons From Great Leaders. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What Makes a Great Leader?

For senior and adult classes, two methods are suggested. First—The grouping of the men and women as leaders.

The material of this lesson is adapted from the Lutheran lesson commentary.

I. The Military Leaders (Lessons 1, 2 and 5).

1. Joshua (Lesson 1). He was skillful in military tactics as well as organization. He possessed natural gifts, but his success was due mainly to his obedience to God.

2. Caleb (Lesson 2). As one of the twelve spies, he insisted that by God's help they could possess Canaan.

3. Gideon (Lesson 5). He obeyed God's strange command to reduce his army to 300 men. With them he routed the host of Midian, and made Israel free for about forty years.

II. Women (Lessons 3, 6, and 7).

1. Deborah (Lesson 3). She was called in an emergency and led the people forward to victory.

2. Ruth (Lesson 6). She adopted a new people, a new God, and a new country, with no thought of personal gain. She became the ancestress of David and thus of Christ.

3. Hannah (Lesson 7). In Hannah shines forth ideal motherhood.

III. Prophets (Lessons 4 and 8).

1. Isaiah (Lesson 4). He has the place of first rank among the prophets. He denounced the sins of Israel. Drunkenness was one of the sins which destroyed Israel.

2. Samuel (Lesson 8). He was director-general of Israel while serving as a prophet of God.

IV. Royalty (Lessons 9, 10, 11 and 12).

1. Saul (Lesson 9). He had the anointing of God and the approval of the people. His days were filled with blunders, largely because he trusted and exalted himself rather than God.

2. David (Lesson 10). David came into prominence unexpectedly. He had the inner qualities that God could use for a true king. He brought the scattered tribes under one government, bound together with the bond of one religion.

3. Jonathan (Lesson 11). He is noted for his friendship for David. He was legal heir to the throne, but renounced his right in favor of David.

4. Solomon (Lesson 12). He came to the throne welcomed by a united nation. The idea of building the temple as well as much material for its erection came to him from his father. He built the temple and dedicated it to God, setting forth that its supreme purpose was God's glory.

Second—The Summary Method. The aim here is to state the leading fact and principal teaching of the several lessons. The following suggestions are made:

Lesson for July 2. Joshua's faith in the promises of God and obedience to the divine command enabled him to carry forward to success the work begun by Moses.

Lesson for July 9. Because Caleb wholly followed the Lord, his strength was preserved.

Lesson for July 16. It was out of the ordinary for God to call a woman to a place of national leadership. Deborah had the good judgment to urge Barak forward.

Lesson for July 23.—Drunkenness and other sins caused Israel's ruin.

Lesson for July 30. Gideon, with a small band of men, routed and destroyed the Midianites because he trusted and obeyed God.

Lesson for August 6. Because Ruth chose to identify herself with the people of God she was abundantly blessed.

Lesson for August 13. Hannah stands out as the ideal godly mother.

Lesson for August 20. Samuel heard the call of God while serving in the capacity in which his mother dedicated him.

Lesson for August 27. Saul shamefully failed because he disobeyed God. Lesson for September 3. Because David was a man after God's own heart, God used him and blessed him in spite of his sins.

Lesson for September 10. Jonathan is an example of a true friend.

Lesson for September 17. Solomon chose wisdom rather than honor and riches. Because of this God was able to give riches and honor.

GEMS OF THOUGHT

The Lord of Glory hungers for your faith and your love.

Pine Shingles Not So Crazy Classical Educations

By ED HOWE

SEVERAL years ago I had occasion to put a new roof on a house, and was talked into buying one of the best of the patent shingles now being offered by enterprising agents as better than old-fashioned pine. I have had constant trouble with the roof ever since. The man who sold me the patent roofing after trying several times to make it satisfactory, finally admitted the best roofing material for the ordinary cottage is the old-fashioned pine shingle of first grade. Any new idea is a risk until it has been practically tried out at least a hundred years. I will remember that this summer when tearing off the patent roof to replace it with old-fashioned pine. Thus I learn; thus everyone learns.

In a certain town there is a man everybody says is crazy. Lately he wrote a letter for the Public Mind column of the local paper, and the editor printed it exactly as written, as a "joke." The man can't spell, but expresses more clear common sense about public affairs than I have known a citizen to write in years. He opposes the present mania for inflation; for government help for everybody; industry, better behavior, and less politics, and agrees with Europeans generally that Americans seem determined to commit suicide. A man knowing that much isn't crazy.

Americans not educated themselves have a tremendous notion of the benefits to be derived from a classical education. I met a farmer recently who had lost his farm because of sending three sons to college. This father believed that a classical education would specially arm and equip his children for their battle with life, but he told me that, after graduation, his sons returned home, and he could not see they had been benefited. Employers even had a prejudice against them, and many ignorant foreigners were being given employment when his sons could not get it.

In the exchange of every dollar there is an element of dishonesty on one side or the other; in every legal transaction as much dishonesty as the traffic will bear. The law itself leans toward dishonesty, as a tribute to human necessities. A man may keep well within the law and still exercise considerable of his naturally roguish disposition.

What is all this human bargaining about? In every case a man or woman declaring to another he is asking too much. It is the first job of all of us to become capable traders; if we are not, we are robbed.

Why do we have locks on all our doors? Why are taxi drivers, street car conductors, clerks, compelled to ring a bell when they take in a cash fare? Why are county treasurers, all classes of officials, bonded? It is acknowledgment of the universal belief in dishonesty.

Just recently twenty of the world's most prominent business men were investigated by congress. The first one called to the witness stand said: "We keep well within the law."

Visit an Indian camp and the bucks will all say: "I'm a good Indian."

We all know we are under suspicion and what is expected of us: to keep well within the law—to be good Indians.

Every man handles the women a little differently. I have a neighbor who has walked out on three wives ("quit them cold," as the neighbors say). Still another man I know well has been thirty-four years getting rid of one, and isn't entirely out of the woods yet.

In meeting the emergencies of life—and, with men, women occupy first place in creating them—I have come to believe the most honorable way is pretty generally the easiest way. For instance: The husband who has walked out on three wives badly crippled himself three times, whereas the other man, who displayed more fairness, is still going fairly good.

After you become old (as I am) you will find one of your heaviest burdens is being regulated too much. . . I do not object to proper regulations, but I am regulated daily and hourly when I have not offended, and regulation is not necessary. I try to meet the natural duties of life with patience, but am heavily burdened by regulators self-appointed, and who should, in any fair consideration of fairness and common sense, let me more quietly pursue my natural tasks.

In our attempts to acquire learning, we have unhappily learned much we must unlearn.

I have frequently noted the man who is always telling what he says to his wife, something after this fashion: "Sweetheart, don't you think a little vacation would do you good? You are not looking any too well this spring, darling, and I am worrying about you," etc. . . I rarely like such a husband.

I have no sympathy with the old cry that men should love each other; decent toleration of the faults of each other is all the Lord expected—more than we grant.

FORGOT THE EXCUSE

On little James' first day at school he was given a card on which his mother was to write the date of his birth. The following day he arrived late, and without the card. "James," said the teacher, "you must bring an excuse for being late, and don't forget the card about when you were born." All out of breath the next day, James rushed in holding a note from his mother. "Teacher," he gasped, "I brought the one about being late but I forgot the excuse for being born."

About Right

Business Man—I don't think an efficiency man would do my business any good. Efficiency Expert—Well, I haven't worked in a place yet that didn't run more efficiently after I left.—Border Cities Star.

Attention, Golfers

Friend—Is it spelt "p-u-t" or "p-u-t-t"? Golfer—"P-u-t-t." "Put" means to place a thing where you want it; "putt" mean a vain attempt to do the same.

A Friendly Tip

Teacher—Johnny, something must be done about your conduct. I will have to consult your father. Johnny—Better not, teacher. It will cost you $10. He's a doctor.

NOT SO POETICAL

Owen was a poet, and, like poets of the younger school, was in arrears with his rent. However, he had promised to pay up as soon as his masterpiece was completed. A week after he had been threatened with eviction the masterpiece was ready to send to the publishers. He showed it to his landlady. "There's the great work," he told her. "An Ode to a Fisherman," by Poet Owen." The landlady sniffed contemptuously. "And this, Mr. Owen," she said, tapping a bundle of bills, "is called 'Owed to a Landlady,' by the same author."

More Substance Needed

"How're you getting on with Jack?" asked the girl's mother. "What are his intentions?" "He told me he could live on my kisses forever," said the girl. "Are you going to let him?" asked mother. "Not until I find out what I'm going to live on," replied the girl.

NO COMEBACK TO THAT

Wife—You never did anything clever in your life. Hubby—You seem to forget, my dear, that I married you.

His Destination

Spectator—I shall be very surprised if that referee doesn't get into hot water after the match. Ardent Supporter—Then you'll be surprised. 'E's goin' in the 'orse-trough.—London Answers.

CHAPTER XI—Continued

Five minutes later Reagan returned to the room. He spread out on the table the contents of Vernon's pockets: a handkerchief, a fountain pen, a notebook, several visiting cards, a fraternity pin, a bunch of keys, less than two dollars in silver, a packet of cigarettes and a box of matches.

Reagan fumbled with the collection. "This all, John? Didn't he have a wallet?"

"Yeh," Reagan flushed. "It's in a special box in the warden's safe. Nothing in it but some money."

"How much?"

"Two hundred and ten dollars. I'll get it."

"Never mind." Jim was holding the bunch of keys in his hand. "Doesn't this look like a new key, John?"

Reagan nodded. "Sure does."

"Bank box, I'll bet," observed Hanvey, as though talking to himself. "Uh-huh, new bank box key. When's the next train for Steel City?"

Reagan consulted his watch. "Midnight."

"I wonder if you'd run up there tomorrow alone?"

"Sure I will. I can be back tomorrow evening. What's the big idea?"

Jim detached the key from the ring. "Take this with you, John. I've got a hunch that Max Vernon rented a box at some big Steel City bank. Take some samples of his handwriting with you, because he'd use an assumed name, of course. You can check up on all boxes rented in the last couple of days—then compare the handwriting."

"And if I find the box shall I take a look inside?"

"No-o. We'll just take it for granted that if he rented a box there the Marland bank money is in it—or, anyway, Vernon's share. What say?"

Reagan rose. "I'm on my way, Chief." At the door he turned. "And if we do find that cash, Jim—and it turns out to be Vernon who had it—will you admit then that I was right?"

Jim smiled broadly. "Maybe," he said. "I'll sure think you were pretty near right, anyway."

CHAPTER XII

Warm brilliant sunshine bathed the courtyard when Tony Peyton and Larry Welch walked out on bond to temporary freedom. There was Ivy Welch, seeming a great deal older than she had four days previously, yet irrepressibly youthful withal; and a score of Larry's undergraduate friends, young men and women who had come down to congratulate the young couple on what every one considered the end of their jeopardy.

Ivy was particularly happy. "They wouldn't have let you out if they thought you were guilty, would they, Larry?"

He shook his head. "I don't believe so, Sis."

"Good!" She clasped her hands. "All the time you were in there, Bud, I couldn't think of anything except—"

He squeezed her hand. "Don't you worry, Kid. I didn't have anything to do with it."

Tony was with a group of her particular friends and Larry nodded toward her.

"Why don't you and she make up, Sis?"

Ivy's face grew stern. "I don't like her, Larry."

"Why?"

"Because she started all this. If she hadn't butted in on Pat and me; if she hadn't run to you; if she hadn't been such a fool as to go to Pat's room at the fraternity house. . . . Oh! can't you see, Larry, that I can't help believing Pat never would have been killed if she had minded her own business?"

"I'm sorry you feel that way, Sis. You know I'm crazy about her."

Ivy sighed. "I guess I'm just a crab, Bud. But if I feel that way—well, I can't help it, can I?" Then she reached out impulsively and pressed his fingers. "Maybe I'll get over it."

Several automobiles were waiting, and at the request of the president, Larry rode to the college with that dignitary and Dean Boyd. They discussed the case gravely and told Larry a great many things about Max Vernon which he had not known. They themselves did not know many details, but the campus was overflowing with rumor. Larry was doubtful.

"It doesn't seem possible that Max would do a thing like that."

"And it didn't seem possible that you or Miss Peyton would, either. We have been mighty worried."

"You've been darn white to me. I intend to resign—so the college won't suffer."

The two older men smiled.

"We're sorry for the scandal, of course, Larry. But we can't accept your resignation—for two reasons: One is that we believe you are innocent. The second is that it wouldn't help you particularly—if you ever came to trial—if we had acknowledged our lack of confidence by permitting you to leave the faculty."

Later that day Larry and Tony met by Old Main and walked toward Pine top. . . . a knoll which rose above the surrounding country and from which one could look down upon the Marland campus, and thence still farther to the sprawling town of Marland. Half the student body saw them together and every young man and woman made a point of waving cordially, but no one joined them. The students were more than a little embarrassed. They wanted the pair to know that there was every belief in their innocence, every sympathy, every willingness to do whatever was necessary by way of help. . . . but there was a natural hesitancy in intruding on their privacy. The tragedy had cast a sort of ghastly mantle about them.

They reached Pine top and stood regarding each other: the man tall and blond and very boyish-looking despite the tiny lines of worry about his eyes; the girl vividly beautiful. Their hands were clasped and they drank deep of the wine of freedom and of their joy at being with each other again. It was Tony who spoke.

"You know how I feel, Larry, about what you did."

He frowned. "What did I do?"

"Telling those detectives that Pat was alive when you left his room. Of course I know he wasn't."

Larry's cheeks blanched.

"How do you know?"

"I know now, Larry. That's all I wanted: To trick an admission from

"When All This Is Over, Tony, You Will Marry Me?"

you. It was fine of you, dear. But we must go to Mr. Hanvey and tell him the truth. That Pat was already dead when you reached his room."

"But I didn't say—"

"Oh, yes you did, Larry. Just a second ago. Now listen to me: I don't know what you think about him—but I believe that terrible-looking Mr. Hanvey is one of the most wonderful men I have ever met. He can tell when we're telling the truth, and he knows when we're lying. I told him the truth, dear—even when it looked like I was tightening a noose around your neck. I was scared—and yet I wasn't scared. Everything I said seemed to increase your danger. Mr. Hanvey looked like he had gone to sleep. Then the next thing we knew we were released on bond. Mr. Hanvey knows a lot. And if he's going to help us, we must help him."

He nodded slowly. "I guess you're right." His face was very serious.

"It's kind of tough on Max Vernon, isn't it?"

"I'm sorry for that boy. Terribly sorry. And yet if killing is ever justified, it was then. We have no right, Larry, to keep the truth from a man like Mr. Hanvey, who is struggling to help us."

"We'll tell him."

They stood in silence for several minutes. Overhead a mocking bird trilled gayly; the pine trees swayed softly in the warm breeze which swept in from the countryside. The air was freighted with the fragrance of flowers and on Pine top there was no suggestion of anything but ineffable peace and happiness. It was so different from the solitary confinement at the Marland jail; so gloriously a relief from the staring at four blank walls and a tiny square of barred window. They were very young and very much in love with each other, and Larry moved so close to her that their bodies touched.

"When all this is over, Tony, you will marry me?"

She looked straight into his eyes.

"Yes, Larry."

"I'd like to put into words. . . . to be able to tell you how much I love you. . . ."

"You don't need to. I understand."

His arms closed about her and he held her close, staring hungrily into her eyes. Then, suddenly, he buried his face in her hair and so they stood for an age of time. . . .

All that afternoon the campus hummed with crazy rumor and wild conjecture. It was one thing to read in the newspapers of a murder and quite another to come in contact with one.

The tragedy had cast a pall over the campus; yet it had brought a new and strange excitement. Even commencement, which at this season of the year usually loomed up as being all-important, seemed a matter of little moment. Examinations held terrors for very few of the students. It was as though they had been confronted by some of the starkness of life a month ahead of time. Human life, human love. . . . examinations and bachelors' degrees seemed of small moment by comparison.

The afternoon dragged away. Larry worked over his class books, trying to rid himself of the effects of the experience and wondering what the future had in store for Tony, for himself, and for Max Vernon. And in his room at the hotel, Jim Hanvey sprawled on the bed and devoured a detective story.

It was there that John Reagan found him. Jim put the book aside reluctantly.

"Gosh," he commented, "it's great—that story. Just as soon as I got interested in something like this, you have to come butting in. What is it?"

Reagan spoke crisply. "On the morning of May second a man answering Max Vernon's description—and there ain't no doubt, Jim, that it was Vernon—entered the American National Bank of Steel City and rented a box. He gave the name of William T. Aragon. He took the box with him into a little booth. Then he left the bank. The box is number two thirty-five, and unless I'm all wrong you'll find a lot of Brother Fiske's lost money right there."

"Good work, John. You didn't look in the box?"

"No. You said not to. But I left word that no one was to be allowed in there, even with a written order from Aragon. That's fixed good and tight. And so—"

The telephone buzzed and Hanvey answered.

"This is the warden at the jail," announced the voice at the other end. "Miss Peyton and Mr. Welch are down here. They want to see you as soon as possible."

"Send 'em over to the hotel, will you?" Then he turned away from the telephone and grinned boyishly at his friend.

"Welch and Miss Peyton are on their way over, John. Stick around if you want. I have a hunch we're going to hear some interesting dope."

Tony Peyton acted as spokesman.

"Larry and I have been talking pretty seriously, Mr. Hanvey. We've decided that you're playing square and are entitled to have the whole truth—so far as we know it."

Jim's big face beamed. "That's fine, Miss Peyton. But I want to ask one thing before we start: Am I going to get the whole truth or only part of it?"

"The whole thing."

"Great! Suppose you begin."

She shook her head. "I haven't a thing to add to what I told you at the jail. That was the plain, unvarnished truth. I think you know the truth by instinct. That's why I told it to you in the first place."

"It's a pity your boy friend didn't get the same hunch. We'd maybe have let him out earlier."

"I was a fool, I suppose," broke in Larry. "But I knew I was innocent and thought you'd never be able to convict me. So I wasn't very much of a hero, after all. And I was a trifle frightened."

"By what?"

"By the thing you've know all the time: that Pat Thayer was dead when I went to his room. Knowing that Miss Peyton had been there and that she was desperate—and seeing Thayer dead—I had every reason to be afraid. Suppose I had said Thayer was dead when I was there and you had believed me? And then suppose it turned out that Vernon had never visited the room? Can't you see that it would have checked it back to Miss Peyton beyond any argument?"

"Yeh. . . . That's right, sure enough. I'm mighty much obliged, Son, for clearing all these things up in my mind. And now suppose you tell me about that visit?"

"There isn't much to tell. I was rather appalled by the depth of Ivy's infatuation for Thayer. I was in a peculiar position, in that I had promised Miss Peyton I wouldn't tell anyone about her marriage to Thayer. I figured that by that time—two o'clock—she had had plenty of chance to see Pat and I felt it was up to me, as Ivy's brother, to warn him off."

"What did you have in mind when you went to Thayer's room?"

The young man hesitated. "I'm trying to be honest, Mr. Hanvey, and the fairest way to answer that question is to say I don't know. But it's only honest to say that I intended to make it mighty clear to Thayer that he'd better keep away from Ivy."

"I see. . . . And when you got there?"

"He was dead. I got rather sick, just looking at the body."

"Did you touch him?"

"Good G—d! No!"

"How long were you in the room?"

"I don't know. Maybe two minutes, maybe ten. I can't remember."

"Why didn't you report finding the body?"

"Because I thought of Miss Peyton." Hanvey nodded approval. "Pretty straight story, Welch. There are just one or two more questions. First of all, did you touch the knife?"

Larry's face expressed surprise.

"What knife?"

"The knife Thayer had been killed with."

"I didn't see any knife."

"I see. . . . Jim extracted a black cigar from his vest pocket, snapped the end from it and lighted the thing with a brief nod of apology to Tony. "You took that diamond ring off Thayer's finger, didn't you?"

Again that startled light flashed in Larry's blue eyes.

"I told you I didn't touch the body at all."

Fruits in Order for Daily Menus

Furnish Vitamin Supplies, Specially Important, at Small Cost.

A new interest is being shown by housekeepers in the relation of food value and cost. Foods are being chosen not only by taste, not only in regard to food value, but in regard to the relation of cost to these other factors.

One of the bright spots in the life of the woman who considers all these things is the fact that fruit has been and is at an unusually low price. Fruits contribute largely to our supply of minerals and vitamins.

The fruits that are used most often in our daily life are probably oranges, bananas and apples, all of which are now staple in our markets. While all of us like a variety in our foods, we can safely choose our fruits with reference to price, as far as food value and taste are concerned. If, for instance, you find a bargain in bananas, which are now at a particularly low price, you use them as your principal fruit for the week, if you use such vegetables as cabbage or lettuce as well. The same is true of apples.

A very interesting comparison of fruits commonly used has been made recently by Doctor Eddy of Columbia university. Fruits are compared in reference to the important mineral content to the content of vitamins A-B-C, the best known vitamins. (B has been divided into two parts—one known as G—but these parts are usually found together in various proportions.) You will note how these vary. You will not depend, for instance, upon prunes for Vitamin C, but you can get a large amount of Vitamin A from them. Next in A content comes bananas, which also supply some units of B and C.

It is only recently that we have been able to confine the vitamin content of food in units. For a long time comparison was made much more generally by checks one, two and three. Of course not all foods have yet been tested by units, but work is continuing in this respect.

In checking cost of food in comparison to food value at the prices indicated, oranges would be the cheapest source of Vitamin C; prunes and bananas the cheapest sources of Vitamin A. If raw cabbage was used for salad to furnish Vitamin C, your diet would be balanced both for cost and vitamin.

The banana, it is interesting to note, has arrived at a new standing in this dietary in the past few years. It has always been a favorite treat for children, but had been considered not too easy of digestion until it was discovered that a ripe and an unripe banana were completely different as far as digestion was concerned. The ripe banana is now being used in infant feeding. The crushed pulp is given a very early age. For best digestion, either for old or young, bananas whose skins are slightly flecked with brown should be used for eating raw. If bananas are to be cooked, it makes no difference whether they are ripe or unripe. Baked, sautéed and broiled bananas are used often now as dessert or as a meat accompaniment. They are also used as apples are in the preparation of such desserts as brown Betty.

Bananas With Bacon.

- 6 bananas
- ½ pound bacon

Roll half lengths of peeled bananas in strips of bacon. Secure with toothpick, if necessary. Broil under flame; or bake in oven-proof dish in a hot oven, 40 degrees Fahrenheit, about 15 minutes, or until bananas are tender and bacon is crisp. Baste at least once during the baking. Whole bananas may be wrapped in bacon and cooked in the same way.

Fried Carrots and Apples.

- 4 medium-sized carrots
- 4 tart apples
- 2 tablespoons butter
- 1 tablespoon sugar
- ¼ teaspoon salt

Scrape the carrots and cut them lengthwise into thin slices. Core apples but do not pare and cut into slices about ¼ of an inch thick. Place a single layer of the apples and the carrots in a large skillet with the butter, cover tightly and cook until well browned, turn, and brown the other side. Just before the cooking is finished sprinkle with the sugar and salt.

Banana and Apple Brown Betty.

- 3 cups bread
- 3 tablespoons butter
- 2 apples
- 3 bananas
- ¼ cup sugar
- ½ teaspoon cinnamon

Cut bread into dice and saute with butter until brown. Peel apples and bananas, cut very thin. Dredge with sugar mixed with cinnamon. Cover bottom of baking dish with the bread, then add fruit and remaining bread in alternate layers, saving a few of the crumbs to put on top. Bake one-half hour, covered, and the last fifteen minutes uncovered, in a moderate oven, 375 degrees Fahrenheit.

Business Error

If you want to GET RID of Constipation worries—

Science says Today use a LIQUID Laxative

1. Control intestinal action exactly—no "purging"
2. Measure to suit your individual needs to the drop
3. Banish Bowel Fatigue and the laxative habit

Here's Why:

Any hospital offers evidence of the harm done by harsh laxatives that drain the system, weaken the bowel muscles, and in some cases even affect the liver and kidneys.

A doctor will tell you that the unwise choice of laxatives is a common cause of chronic constipation.

Fortunately, the public is fast returning to the use of laxatives in liquid form.

A properly prepared liquid laxative brings a perfect movement. There is no discomfort at the time and no weakness after. You don't have to take "a double dose" a day or two later.

In buying any laxative, always read the label. Not the claims, but the contents. If it contains one doubtful drug, don't take it.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a prescription preparation in which there are no mineral drugs. Its ingredients are on the label. By using it, you avoid danger of bowel strain. You can keep the bowels regular, and comfortable; you can make constipated spells as rare as colds.

The liquid test:

This test has proved to many men and women that their trouble was not "weak bowels", but strong cathartics:

First. Select a good liquid laxative. 2. Take the dose you find is suited to your system. 3. Gradually reduce the dose until bowels are moving regularly without any need of stimulation.

Syrup pepsin has the highest standing among liquid laxatives, and is the one generally used. It contains senna, a natural laxative which is perfectly safe for the youngest child. Your druggist has Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

Little of All Sorts

"Is she a progressive or a conservative sort of woman?" "It's hard to say. She wears a last year's hat, drives a this year's car and lives on next year's income."—Star Stories.

Tired

"Your son-in-law has many schemes for getting money away from you." "Yes, I wish he'd try some of them on the general public."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Constituents	Wt.
Finely ground yel. corn	70
Finely ground wheat	20
Meat Scraps	5
Bone Meal	4
Salt	1

In addition the chicks were fed skim milk and chick size grit. Cod-liver oil was added to the mash until green material could be picked up outside. At the age of six weeks a scratch feed consisting of cracked corn, wheat and oats was fed in connection with the mash. This ration was fed all summer and a good growth obtained.

Clifford was successful in raising 470 of the chicks. 150 of the best pullets have been selected for layers and are laying a number of eggs already. Some of the best pullets and cockerels were exhibited at the St. Joe fair and won several prizes.
