Celebration for Janie

TANE RAINEY looked across the I lamplit living room at Janie, who sat relaxed and lovely, gazing sadly from the window at the Hudson river. "She's beautiful," thought Jane. "I don't wonder he loves her." Jane, too, was beautiful, with the maturity of forty. She, too, looked somewhat

Her husband, Clarkson, rustled his paper nervously. Tension was in the air. He gazed over the tops of his glasses at his wife and his daughter. Since the Boy Scouts were "They're beautiful," he thought. "It's a darn shame that young whippersnapper has to spoil it all."

"Well, Janie," he said, "you're not by any chance gracing the family circle with your presence tonight, are Jane and Clarkson talked all evening. "I won't have it," Clarkson stormed. "I won't have it. He's just a boy. He's no more fitted to take care of Janie than-well, it just won't

Jane raised objections, but she really agreed with him. They couldn't think of Bert as grown up. They had known him from babyhood, just as they had Janie. "Of course, Clarkson, I suppose we ought to be glad we know him so well-know he's decent, and all that. But if it had only been Mr. Gregory."

That was the trouble, of course. They both favored another suitor for Janie's hand, a man of twenty-eight, established, charming, mature. Not Bert, twenty-two, stumbling at his first job, awkward, boyish.

They went to bed that night without seeing Janie. While they were they must make the best of it. "It's Janie's life, of course," admitted four tickets for that show Janie wants to see, and we'll have dinner first at the Ritz. Tell the child to bring her boy along for our blessing."

It was a radiant Janie who got out mother at the gay hotel an hour later. But when seven-fifteen came and no Bert appeared—when seven-thirty came and they had to sit down to dinner without him, Janie wasn't so happy. She had telephoned his apartment. He wasn't in.

So the celebration of Janie's engagement wasn't very gay, after all. Her father was all contrition. It was his bungling fault, he thought. His reaction toward Bert improved by the

"The" Sally Whitcomb

By ALICE DUANE

©, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service

CALLY Whitcomb, from her high window, watched the guests gathering on the terrace above the lake before dinner with unexpected resent-

"I'll cheat," she said. "I'll cheat if I have to."

Depression had struck Sally a double blow. First it had killed her well-todo father, after he had lost all his money in one of the financial crashes. She had pluckily looked about for a means of making money. As a result of her college diploma, natural taste and aptitude, she had landed a job teaching smart young girls in a fashionable school. But smart young girls, like everybody else, were feeling the depression, and the Rosecliff school found it necessary to curtail expenses. Sally, being the last teacher taken on, had been the first laid off. And no other work seemed to be open to her.

So, after several months when the shreds of her old fortune had been her only means of support, she had gratefully accepted employment from the mother of one of her old friends-now married and living abroad.

"It may be a bit trying, Sally," Mrs. Van Arsdale had said. "Aunt Jane is a bit of a trial, and you may get awfully bored. There's a trained nurse, of course, to look after her, but she wants someone young and attractive as a sort of companion."

So Sally went to the Adirondacks with the Van Arsdales as Aunt Jane's companion. It wasn't so bad. She read to the crotchety old invalid, she wrote letters for her, she helped her do crossword and jigsaw puzzles. Aunt Jane always went to her room at six, and the nurse took charge of her then, so Sally's evenings were free. She had been swimming in the lake while Aunt Jane had her usual afternoon nap when she first saw him. She hadn't seen him enter the lake. But there he was, sitting on the float when she came up from a dive.

"Nice work," he said, lazily, admir-

Sally pulled herself deftly up beside "Nice water," she said. "When did Sally racked her brain. "No." she said, after a minute. "I'm Sally Whit-

"Oh!" said Jack. "The Sally Whit-

Sally laughed. "Well, I'm Sally Whitcomb. I don't suppose there are two of me."

They sat silent, content, for a few

"Come on," he said suddenly, jumping up and reaching out a hand to help Sally to her feet. 'It's time to go dress. Race you to the dock."

They plunged together into the cold water and swam silently to the house. Sally liked him, and sensed he liked

She had looked for him again the next afternoon when she went for her swim. But he hadn't been there.

Today Aunt Jane had been particularly trying, and Sally had missed her swim. "I'm not going to take a nap," Aunt Jane had said. "It's such a nice day I'm just going to stay awake and work out that new crocheted mat."

"I'll cheat," said Sally to her reflection in the mirror, as she brushed her burnished hair, "I'll make him like

After dinner that night she wandered away from the other guests in quest of Jack. She found him smoking under the pine trees at the edge of the little beach. He jumped to his feet as she came toward him. "It's you, isn't it? I was just going up to the house." And he started to walk away toward the voices on the terrace and the lights of the house.

"Well, you're not very polite," said Sally. He turned toward her suddenly and took both her hands in a strong, nervous grasp. "I came out specially to find you. Anything the matter with me?" Sally went on.

"Yes," said Jack sternly. "You're too darned-attractive. I'm sorry. I've tried to avoid you. But I can't help it. knew, the minute I saw you, like a million dollars there on the float, and now, you doll yourself up so you look like a princess and follow me out here. What do you think I'm made of?"

Sally giggled in the dark. "It's two years old," she said. "Are you rich?" "No," said Jack, gruffly. "I'm poor and I'm nobody. And coming up on the train Mr. Van Arsdale said I'd meet Sally Whitcomb here-The Sally Whitcomb. Said your father was an old friend-"

"Yes," said Sally quietly. "Is that all he said?"

"All? It was more than enough, when I went to South America two years ago, with the vain and mistaken idea that that continent needed me to gather up a fortune, I knew all about you. I'd fallen for you then-your picture in the rotogravures. One of the richest, most popular girls in town-"

"Well? Didn't you make good?" "No. I lost what little I had. And now I'm sort of a secretary for Van Arsdale.

"But so am I. I mean, I haven't a cent in the world but what the Van Arsdales pay me to amuse their funny old aunt, and I thought you werewell, anyway-you see-we match.

Beth's Duty

The doctor's wife, Mrs. Penny, had promptly brought out a fat pocketbook and paid her dues, with a cheery laugh about some book that she had read recently, and which she recommended to the pretty young treasurer. a vocal duet. Beth had gone away from the doctor's with a large bunch of Mrs.

Penny's special pink roses. Beth never forgot that hour at Mrs. Bleak's house. That is, she did not forget it for a long, long time, and at 7:30. whenever she did remember that hour stolen from a June morning, she shivered as with sudden cold.

ried just yet?"

"We did speak of next winter some time," murmured Beth, with a sudden, horrid feeling that Mrs. Bleak did not quite approve of the engagement.

"So soon?" the lady lifted her hands in horror. "Why not?" asked Beth bluntly.

"My dear," purred Mrs. Bleak, "I was just thinking about what my husband said about Donald's career!" "What about it?"

"I am really quoting my husband, and he would be very angry with me if he had ever known that I had told what he confided to me-but I feel that you should know, Beth-it is a woman's duty to make sacrifices, you Ind. know!"

"I know," said Beth dully. "Well, I will be perfectly frank with you, trusting that you will not mention a word to Donald-Azariah told me last night that he was pleased with Donald's work during the past two years-and said that he wanted to advance him to a junior partnership provided Donald can raise the necessary money for investment in the firmmerely a matter of form, you know, my dear!"

"Yes, of course," said Beth calmly. "You may have heard that Mr. Bleak does not approve of young men marrying when they are too young, or before they are really settled in business, and he went on to say that if Donald really intended to marry very firmed bachelor!"

Another moment, and Beth was out of the house and going down the prim rebellion.

Why, she had planned to be the greatest help to Donald! Beth was an accomplished housekeeper, and she had always worked at home with her mother in the old-fashioned way.

That night after she arrived home Beth talked with her parents. She never told a word of what Mrs. Bleak had said to her, but she suggested that she would like to go to the mountaiss where her aunt had a summer hool, and teach there! And they consented, and when she told Donald the next day, and casually explained that she wanted a change, he, too, cordially agreed with her-and so Beth Raynor went, and left Donald free for promotion.

Toward the end of September, when the summer school ended, Donald Blake got into his motor car and with a word to Mr. and Mrs. Raynor, started for Beth's mountain retreat.

Beth was walking in the woods when the trees were flaming with the first frost touch. She had in a way enjoyed the summer, though she had missed her parents, and she had cruelly missed Donald.

Donald had already saved the money for their house, and the first year's living expenses had been planned with the thriftiness which had been a birthright. Had Mrs. Bleak really spoken the truth or was it only a woman's silly gossip?

It was then that Donald appeared and took Beth in his arms. "We want you at home," he told her gravely, and when at last she had taken farewell of her aunt, and they motored down the mountain roads towards home, he told how much he had missed her.

When they reached the town, Donald insisted on driving her through the business center, and suddenly he pointed to a new tall brick block that had grown during her absence. "My offices are up there," he told her. "During the summer, I decided that I could do better alone, and my office is now being rushed. Old Bleak was furious -told me I was making the mistake of my life to get married just now, and so-I just went ahead and had our house built according to our plans-" and just then they turned another corner and there was Beth's old home, and next door was the prettiest new bungalow, waiting for the finishing touches and Beth's opinion.

As for Beth's duty-it seems to be entirely in her own home and that of her parents, while young Donald's business is nearly equal to that of Azarlah Bleak's!

FIRE!

FIRE!

Wednesday morning at 1:30 o'clock fire was discovered in the smoke house located only a few feet from Lawrence Karch's residence, 3 miles northeast of Mt. Zion. Prompt aid rendered by help summoned by telephone saved the house as shown by Mrs. Karch's letter of appreciation printed below.

The Telephone Saves Many Thousands of Dollars . Each Year.

> There Is No Charge For Installing Telephone,

Illinois Commercial Telephone Co. Gentlemen:

On the morning of the 13th at 1:30 o'clock we were awakened by a light shining in at the window and we discovered that the smoke house was on fire. Mr. Karch ran to the telephone and notified the operator at Mt. Zion. The operator called the fire department and notified the neighbors living close by and in a few minutes we had help.

The first thing we talked about this morning was the fact that if we hadn't have had a telephone we wouldn't have our home today. So we are mighty thankful for our telephone and hope we can always have one.
