Special Judge Election Monday, January 29th

William E. Redmon, the Republican candidate for Circuit Judge at the special election to be held in this district on Monday, January 29, 1934, to fill the vacancy made by the death of Judge Horace W. McDavid, was born on a farm and grew to manhood in Jasper County of this State. He attended country schools and finished in the Carbondale Normal at Carbondale, Illinois. He taught school in what is called "Egypt," and studied law between times. He moved to Decatur in 1892 and commenced the practice of law there, and from that time to the present he has devoted his entire time and energy to his practice.

He is married and has seven children and eight grandchildren so that he has experienced the whole gamut of human life as ordained by nature. One of his sons, a physician, served twenty-three months in France in the World War before the armistice was signed. The greater portion of that time he was at the front. The other son served four years in the United States Navy and upon application for voluntary enlistment in the World War he was rejected because of physical infirmity incurred during his naval service, and is now engaged with his father in the general practice of law. Three of his daughters live in Decatur, and two outside of the State. He has been endorsed by the Progressive Ex-service Men's Club of Decatur.

In 1900 he was elected State's Attorney of Macon County and served in that capacity until 1912 and his public record in that office was a brilliant one, and commendable in every degree. In this public office he early sought means for the purpose of redeeming those unfortunates who had been sent to the penitentiaries and reform schools. Since a great part of the work of a Circuit Judge has to deal with criminal offenders and delinquent people and the application of the benefits of the laws of this State to their needs, this experience of Mr. Redmon will be of incalculable value when elected Circuit Judge.

After relinquishing the office in 1912 Mr. Redmon engaged in the general practice of law, and in that practice which has been steadily growing through the years, he has experienced in actual trial, both before court and jury, almost every conceivable kind of litigation, including criminal, law, equitable and probate proceedings. He has been uniformly successful, and is now regarded as one of the most able lawyers in Central Illinois. His clientele is drawn from all groups of citizens, principally from individuals and private organizations, and very little, if at all, from corporations. He is well known for his absolute fairness and high sense of justice, which inspires the universal confidence of all who know him. He is devoted to his family, and its welfare. His character and personal habits of life have never been called in question.

It is indeed fortunate that this district has an opportunity to elect such a man. The Decatur Herald and Review in an editorial last summer said:

"Our greatest enthusiasm is for W. E. Redmon, whose qualifications for Judge are so high it is extraordinary that he should have been nominated."

Reed, Dec. 29, at the Blue Lantern cafe, Hays, Kan., were bound over to district court after a long preliminary hearing in the justice court of B. M. Dreiling, says the Hays Daily News of Jan. 16th.

Dreiling overruled a defense motion for discharge of the defendants on the ground of insufficient evidence, and fixed bond for the two youths at $20,000 each. Bahl was released on furnishing bond. Ben Jacobs had not furnished bond.

Roosevelt's Message to 73rd Congress

It is an unfortunate thing that President Roosevelt's budget message to the Seventy-Third Congress will, like all such documents, receive only the most cursory reading. Few budget messages have been as unusual or as important—few have, thru statistics, so well illustrated an Administration's aims and purposes.

The budget situation has three distinct phases: First, the government is to borrow $10,000,000,000 between now and end of the fiscal year—a rate exceeding monthly borrowings made when we were in the thick of the war; second, at end of the fiscal year we will have the largest peacetime deficit in our history; third, beginning with the next fiscal year in July, the financial policy will be entirely reversed—no special expenditures of any moment, and Treasury receipts above those actually needed for routine operation of the government, will be used to reduce the deficit.

Mr. Roosevelt thus believes that by the middle of this year extraordinary measures will no longer be required to speed recovery. He is as awake as anyone to their terrific cost, and he has implicit faith that time will prove them to be worth a great deal more than the people have had to pay for them. Part of their cost has been alleviated by his insistence on drastic economy so far as ordinary federal expenditures are concerned. The President has advised members of the House, where all appropriations must be inaugurated, that further expenditures would be extremely undesirable.

The Treasury is looking forward to 1934-35 with hopes for increased revenues. Estimates forecast a rise in income tax returns which will bring them $1,265,000,000, as compared with $864,000,000 this year. The processing tax on farm products is expected to jump 30 per cent, customs receipts 17 per cent. Internal revenue taxes, because of liquor, should swell substantially. The President has said that he contemplates no new taxes and that some of the less important ones may be reduced or eliminated.

Big News of 1933

Every year furnishes a lot of big news, and 1933 was no exception. Following an annual custom, managing editors of the large news services have reviewed the grist which went through the mill, and picked what they consider the 10 biggest stories of the year.

All agreed upon the first five, which they listed in the following order:

1. Repeal of prohibition.
2. Recognition of Russia.
3. The banking holiday.
4. Wreck of the dirigible Akron.
5. Attempt to assassinate Franklin D. Roosevelt, resulting in the death of Mayor Cermack of Chicago.

Others mentioned included the death of former President Coolidge; the California earthquake; Wiley Post's around the world flight; Tammany's defeat; the San Jose lynchings, and Colonel and Mrs. Lindbergh's four-continent flight.

The greatest volume of news was made by stories concerning President Roosevelt's recovery program. Next to the President the most publicized individual was General Johnson, NRA administrator.

Age and Efficiency

The late William James, reputedly the greatest of American psychologists, is said to have declared that most men are old fogies at the age of 25. Bruce Barton interprets this statement to mean that by the age of 25 most men have formed permanent prejudices and have closed their minds to new ideas.

If this theory be correct, which we do not believe, there are certainly many striking exceptions. Many men long past the age mentioned have struck out into new fields of endeavor and have developed abilities in later life of which they gave little promise in their youth.

As to the continuance of executive and creative activities to ripe old age, innumerable examples may be cited. Consider Oliver Wendell Holmes, an active member of the Supreme Court until he was past 90; President Hindenburg of Germany at 86; Andrew W. Mellon holding one of the most important cabinet positions until he was past 77; Thomas A. Edison, who continued at work until a short time before his death at 84. The list might be continued almost indefinitely.

The Nation's Capital

Among the troublesome questions which confronted Congress in the early days of the republic was that of selecting a permanent seat of government. Between 1774 and 1788 the old Continental Congress held sessions at various times in no less than eight different towns.

These were Philadelphia, Baltimore, Lancaster, York, Princeton, Annapolis, Trenton and New York. This continual moving about of the seat of government caused Francis Hopkinson, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, to facetiously suggest that the capital be placed on wheels, so that it might be readily moved from place to place as desired.

When the new government under the present constitution was formed in 1789, the seat of government was temporarily located in New York, but was removed to Philadelphia the following year. After much discussion the present site was selected and the cornerstone of the capitol was laid by President Washington on September 18, 1793, with Masonic ceremonies.

The government was removed to Washington in 1800, during the administration of President Adams. Of the condition of the place at that time a writer says: "The new city's streets and parks existed on paper only. New arrivals saw gangs of laborers making the first improvements since the clearing away of the forest trees on what has become the most famous historic street in the country, the broad stretch of Pennsylvania Avenue."

To Plant Two and Half Million Trees

Two and a half million trees will be planted this spring by the Conservation Corps Camps engaged in soil erosion work under the direction of the State Dept. of Conservation, it has been announced by Director C. F. Thompson of the Dept. of Conservation.

This tree planting will reclaim an estimated 166,000 acres of eroded land. The necessary preliminary work, such as construction of check dams and levelling eroded slopes, has been or is being completed. Ten camps are engaged in this work in several sections of the state.

One million of the young trees that will be used will be obtained from the state operated and owned tree nursery at the State Forest in Union county. The State Division of Parks will also set out over a million trees in state parks this spring if money is made available for this purpose by the Federal government.

Interesting Notes

Books so small that two handfuls contain a liberal education are in the collection of the Library of Congress.

In the days of the Roman Caesars, the Emperor Augustus set a limit of 68 feet for the height of buildings.

The Navy dirigible Macon carries five small fighting planes which can travel more than 200 miles an hour.

More than 50,000 communities in the United States are dependent wholly upon the bus and truck for transportation services.

Mrs. Harriet Blerton of London declared on her 100th birthday that her long life was due to eating a green apple every day.

Mrs. Laura Fleming of Chicago testified in her suit for divorce that her husband had never been known to tell the truth.

When John Curran of Chicago threatened to make mincemeat of his wife she had him arrested, but withdrew her complaint when he apologized.

One reason why no one ever found the mythical pot of gold at the end of the rainbow is that the rainbow is not merely a bow, but a complete circle, therefore without an end. As Dr. Humphreys of the weather bureau recently explained, aviators high above the earth see it as a circle and the plane seems headed toward the center as long as it is visible.

Ford Observer Finds NRA Protects Public

Dearborn, Mich.—"Six weeks in Washington is sufficient to give anyone a different conception of what is occurring in this Nation than he could have otherwise," says a featured editorial in Henry Ford's Dearborn Independent. "Code making is not the haphazard undertaking so many thought it would be when the NIRA was passed," the article continues. "Neither is it the intention that the codes now being made an integral part of the law of this nation are temporary in character. The codes will provide the proper distribution of profit between capital and labor and issue an equitable cost to the consumer. President Roosevelt meant what he said when he sponsored the cause of the 'forgotten man.' Real concern is evident in Washington that the rights of the small manufacturer, the small merchant and the agriculturist be protected, as well as the rights of those engaged in labor. There is every effort also to give to those who operate large business its fair and just share of protection. The real fight that comes up over every code comes when the large interests seek to control the code-making in order to gain special privilege for those favored classes who formerly controlled the government. It is impossible not to realize how hopeless it is to think of returning to the era that has passed into history. This NRA program that is so much discussed must go over. To permit it to fail means unutterable chaos. It means complete collapse of the nation's financial system and complete disruption of transportation and distribution facilities."

Pig Lives 50 Days Hidden in Corn Crib

Mahomet, Jan. 20.—The Geo. Irle farm, one and three-fourth miles southeast of Mahomet was a scene of excitement of Thursday afternoon. A local shelling outfit was shelling out the driveway of the corn crib. They were nearing the far end of the crib and had been raking from the top until the corn was left about six feet high.

The raking ceased, the rest clamored around to see what had happened. To their surprise a pig was lying in the corn. The pig was alive.

Irle knew from what litter of pigs this one had come. The rest weighed on the average from 125 to 150 pounds. This one weighed at the most about half as much as the rest.

How this pig happened to be there is beyond comprehension. It appeared to have been there for at least 50 days. It has lived on corn alone during its imprisonment, as there was no other food available. It is thought however, that probably the pig derived moisture from the corn and thus saved himself from dying of thirst.

After being carefully carried from the corn crib to the hog lot the pig was put on its feet. To the amazement of all, it could stand by itself and take a few steps. It saw the rest of the hogs drinking and went crazy for water. The pig is living and is now acting very much like the rest of the litter only much smaller and very unique looking.

Love and Salesmanship

By FRANCES COWLES

© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service

JUSTINE CARR was certainly not made of the stuff whereof good salesmanship is compounded. But it was absolutely necessary for her to go to work that summer, and the only job available that promised more than a bare living was this job of taking orders for women's gingham dresses. It was in the real country where she got most orders, but there she had to walk endlessly to get to the next house. Really, she ought to have had a flivver.

One very hot day in July she was "doing" the country section near Melrose. She had spent a day and a half without a single order and she had to pay for a night's lodging in Melrose besides. Justine wore a fresh pink frock herself. One of the sort that sold for $2.98. She looked so fresh and pretty in that inexpensive dress that women seemed to want to buy one like it. But the woman at the last farmhouse had slammed the door in her face and she had walked a good half mile to the next house. She rang an old-fashioned doorbell. After waiting quite a while the door was opened and there appeared a very warm-looking young man holding a frying pan in one hand and a broom under his arm.

"Good morning," said Justine, using the most ingratiating tone of voice. "May I have just a word with your wife?"

"You could if I had one," said the young man bluntly.

"I should have known," said Justine—"then the lady of the house."

"The lady of the house, if that's what you call her, has gone to Europe. Personally, I think she was no lady."

"Maybe there's some other lady here," purred Justine. "You see, I'm taking orders for gingham dresses. This is one I'm wearing—it cost only $2.98."

The young man whistled. "Gee," he said, "it looks like a hundred dollars to me. But I'm sorry there isn't a lady or a woman in the whole house. If there was I wouldn't be—doing this."

He nodded toward the frying pan in one hand and broom in the other. "Well, I'm sorry," said Justine, throwing aside her suave manner. "About how far is it to the next house in that direction?" She waved her hand toward the dusty road beyond. Meanwhile she set down her portmanteau and mopped her brow with a dainty handkerchief.

"About a mile," said the young man. "You don't mean you're taking it on foot! Great Scott! That's terrible!" "Oh, I don't mind the walk—only no one seems to want to order any dresses."

"That certainly is a fine dress you're wearing," he said, and then: "Say, it occurs to me that maybe I might order some—I know my sister would like them. You come on in and get a drink of ice water."

"You see, my sister wanted to go abroad with her husband," the young man called from the kitchen while he was getting the water, and then resumed as he came in the living room, "and she asked me to come out and hold the house down. She had a cook and another girl—said they had promised to stay. You see, there are three children. Well, I was going to spend two months writing a survey of an expedition I took in South America last winter. I thought I could do my work here as well as anywhere. Well, I managed all right until last week. Then the girls had a row with each other and it ended by their both leaving. They hate it off here in the country. I can't get anyone to come out and help me for love or money. I'm doing all the work."

There was a pause and then the young man and Justine spoke at once, and each said, "I was thinking—" Peter said that he was thinking that he could get away long enough to drive Justine on up to the next farmhouse. It was a shame to think of her walking on such a day; and Justine said with some confusion that she was thinking that if Peter really did need a woman to work for him she would be willing to take the position. "I can cook and wash dishes and look after the children," she said.

So Justine stayed. She just took off her hat and went out into the kitchen, found an apron and began washing dishes. Later she sent home for a few belongings. Peter insisted on paying her the salary that had been left for the two maids who had departed—because as a matter of fact she was doing as much as they both had done—and Peter was left undisturbed to work on his survey. Only sometimes he chose to go out into the kitchen and dry dishes with Justine. One day he told her he loved her. He finished drying a plate and then said he wanted to marry her. Justine went on washing dishes. Then he put down the dish and pulled her away, with her hands all covered with soapsuds and dripping with water, and held her in his arms.

"But just think what a shock it would be to your sister to come home and find that you'd got engaged to the cook."

"Well, then, let's spare their feelings. Let's get married—and when they come home I'll just say that I got married and my wife came home to help hold the house down."

Better Beans

TWO beans are better than one, to paraphrase the old saw in modern slang, and if this is true three beans, by the same token, ought to be better still. So here are three bean recipes, each one of which is better than both the others, if you can figure that out. If not, leave it to Professor Einstein at Princeton. Perhaps he can.

Three Royal Recipes

Baked Beans Parmesan: Sauté one small diced onion and one diced canned pimiento in two tablespoons butter till golden brown. Add the contents of a No. 2 can of beans, (the kind that are processed in the same way as you cook them outdoors in camp), one-eighth teaspoon pepper and three tablespoons Parmesan cheese, and heat thoroughly. Serve very hot, garnished with sweet gherkins. Serves four.

Lima Beans en Casserole: Sauté one small minced onion and one-half a shredded green pepper in one tablespoon fat for five minutes. Add the contents of a can of tomato soup and of a No. 2 can of lima beans. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Pour into a buttered casserole, and bake thirty minutes in a moderate, 375 degree, oven. Serves six.

Carrots with String Beans: Heat the contents of a can of string beans. Cut three carrots in fine shreds about the size and length of beans, and cook till tender. Add to beans, and season with butter, salt and pepper. Serves eight.*

Many who expect political plums get only applesauce.

Naturally, if one's income is fixed it is hard to budget.

A TRIO OF ENCHANTING PERFUMES

to keep pace with the racing hours!

No one dress is correct for all occasions. Not is any one fragrance!... The clever woman of today chooses her perfumes as she chooses her costumes—to express the spirit of the hour!

It is for her that the makers of OUTDOOR GIRL have created three enchanting new odors, scientifically blended to match the three major moods of the day.

"DAWN" is the scent-harmony of early morning... a veritable bouquet of Spring itself, coaxed from the rarest flowers. "NOON" complements the spirit of sports... a blithe fragrance, slightly more pronounced in odor. "NIGHT" breathes the magic and mystery of star-studded skies... a seductive extract in perfect key with the feminine mood of romance.

DAWN, NOON and NIGHT are available in three different sizes at leading drug, department and chain stores. If your dealer cannot supply you with all three of the new OUTDOOR GIRL odors, mail the coupon.
