Land of Wooden Shoes at New Fair

Windmills, dikes and canals of the Netherlands will be reproduced in this Dutch village of the new World's Fair which opens in Chicago May 26. It is one of fifteen "foreign villages" which will offer the visitor a "tour of the world" in a single day. The new Fair will have 84 miles of free exhibits. Music, fireworks, free public spectacles and free entertainment will be attractive features. Cost to visitors will be less than last year, when the average visitor spent only $1.17 a day inside the grounds. Chicago's beautiful June weather makes that month an opportune time to visit the entirely completed Fair and see it while it is fresh.

Tuberculin Test is Safe and Harmless

To correct some popular misconceptions concerning the use of tuberculin in the diagnosis of tuberculosis, the medical committee of the Illinois Tuberculosis Association has issued a statement setting forth facts regarding the substance.

"The tuberculin test is simple, safe and harmless. The test is made by placing a drop of the material within the upper surface layer of the skin, either by a tiny scratch or injection. If the spot becomes red and slightly swollen within two or three days it means that live tuberculosis germs are somewhere in the body. It means an infection but not necessarily disease. The small red reaction area disappears and leaves no scar or other effects."

"Tuberculin is a colorless liquid made with exactness and extreme care in laboratories and under government supervision. It is thoroughly sterilized by heat and by filtration and contains no germs, either living or dead. Its sole purpose is to determine whether or not there are living germs in the body."

"If the test is positive, indicated by the small red spot where the injection is made, the child should be X-rayed to see if harm has been done to the lung. Usually no harm is done because the body fights the germs and keeps them from doing damage. Occasionally the germs win and cause tuberculosis. If the X-ray shows damage, a careful examination should be made of every member of the household to learn if the child is being exposed to an open case of tuberculosis."

State Wide Drive To Eradicate Noxious Weeds

A state-wide weed eradication drive has been launched by the Department of Agriculture to curb losses that run into thousands of dollars annually and are directly traceable to the presence of noxious weeds in small grain fields. Responding to a recent suggestion of J. H. Lloyd, assistant director of agriculture, boards of supervisors in various sections of Illinois already have named 509 noxious weed commissioners. It is hoped to extend this phase of the campaign to every township in the state.

The Rogers Railroad

Will Rogers is known the world over as a comedian, but few know that he was once a railroad magnate. A story to that effect is told, however, and for all we know it may be true.

It is said that in the early days of Claremore, Will's home town in Oklahoma, that flourishing village was five miles from a railroad. Will and his brothers built a branch railroad to connect Claremore with the main line, also got up some nifty letterheads, on which the names of the brothers were listed as high officials of the road. They also had some good-looking courtesy passes printed, which they freely exchanged with officials of other railroads. By this means they were enabled to do quite a bit of traveling without transportation expense.

When one inquisitive railroad president took it upon himself to investigate the status of the Rogers line, and found that it was only five miles long he wrote to protest that it was not fair to exchange passes with such an insignificant road.

Will Rogers replied by admitting that the Rogers line was not very long in length, but that it was as wide as anybody's old railroad.

Organized Crime

From investigations by the National Crime Commission, it has been disclosed that a highly organized system of "fences" as receivers and disposers of stolen goods are called, handle more than $500,000,000 worth of loot each year.

Newton D. Baker, former Secretary of War, who is chairman of the Commission, declares that the lone burglar is now a rarity, and that well organized gangs are plying their thieving trade along efficient business lines.

In order to do this they must have definite outlets for the property stolen. If these could be eliminated, Mr. Baker believes that the total thefts would be largely reduced. While police and other officers of the law are aware of this condition, and generally do what they can to break up these "fences," there is need for greater co-operation on the part of the public in keeping a lookout for places of this character and promptly reporting them to the authorities.

Losses suffered by the public from thefts, burglary and robbery almost equal the destruction by fire. If these losses are to be lessened there must be increased vigilance on the part of all citizens and a greater determination to aid in putting criminal gangs out of business.

Harry Houdini

A recent article recounts the feats of the late Harry Houdini, who was perhaps the greatest magician of all time—a man whose mysterious performances led many to believe that he was endowed with supernatural power.

But Houdini himself made no such claims. He declared that he performed his astounding exhibition acts through sheer physical dexterity acquired by years of study and practice. His ability to escape from a wooden box, wrapped with ropes and chains, in which he was bound hand and foot and placed under water, was a remarkable example of his skill, while he repeatedly demonstrated that he could release himself from any kind of handcuffs or shackles that might be placed upon him.

One of Houdini's feats was to remain in a sealed coffin under water for an hour and a half, conserving the oxygen in the small air space by taking short and infrequent breaths.

Much attention was given by Houdini to the exposure of spiritualistic mediums, all of whom he denounced indiscriminately as frauds. He made a standing offer of $10,000 to any medium who could produce any phenomena which he could not duplicate through natural agencies. The reward was never claimed.

Houdini wrote several books on various phases of his art, but it is said that the secrets of his most important and almost incredible performances died with him.

Frosting First or Last

By MAE LOUISE FOSTER

© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate
WNU Service

"EARLY?" queried Glenn, poking a red-thatched head around the door of the tiny apartment which Alice shared with a girl friend.

"Perfectly punctual," Alice didn't look up. Bubbles seemed to burst in Glenn's heart and puff away his breathing as he watched her in that ridiculous frill of an apron, preparing dinner—for him.

He hoped fervently that this one had turned out as desired. Others, several others, hadn't. Glenn loved that firm little rounded chin, but Alice was quite as firm as her chin. No amount of coaxing could change her determination not to marry Glenn until she had learned to cook.

Up until a year ago she didn't even have to comb her own hair. Then crash! the family fortune vanished and much to her surprise she found herself holding a job. Glenn had urged that if she'd marry him she'd find herself cooking just as she'd found herself working.

What if she said no this time—Glenn's heart seemed to part in the center to let an ice-cube through. She couldn't say no today because the company was sending him to Argentina Saturday. He wouldn't be back for two years. Two long years without her? Impossible! She must go with him.

The salad was good. So was the cold meat. The asparagus was scorched and after the first taste he neglected it. But the jellied fruit and coffee proved in turn delicious and when Alice produced a cake dotted thick with pecans, he leaned over and kissed her. "Perfect," he declared.

"Which?" asked Alice, with a little smile that shouldn't have looked molded, but did.

"Both," he asserted, "and the next time you see me I'll have a marriage license in my pocket." Gathering his courage he explained quickly, "That export job materialized unexpectedly. We are leaving for Argentina Saturday."

Alice ignored his remarks. Rippling a little laugh, she asked, "Didn't you like the asparagus?"

"It wasn't bad," he said lightly, wishing he'd had sense enough to eat it. "Why worry about the siddish? The rest was perfect."

"The rest," replied Alice slowly, "came from the delicatessen." Alice's mouth twisted, "Once," she said, "I overheard a conversation in which you declared can openers were the first step to the divorce court. Remember?"

But Glenn wouldn't listen this time. He caught her hands tightly. "Just because this dinner went phooey is no sign another will. Try again. Try now. This is a matrimonial crash. Let's lick it. Is a cake hard to make?" "I never tried, but I'm sure they are, why?"

"Let's try one now and if it's okay, we'll say it's written in the stars, all signs favorable—and Mrs. Glenn will learn to cook in Argentina."

They were in the kitchenette, exploring shelves.

"There," she checked carefully with the cookbook. "Now go away and don't come back for an hour."

"I'll go," he told her, stealing a flour-dabbed kiss, "and get the license." All the way to the license bureau he was remembering cakes. Cakes his mother'd made, cakes he'd pilfered from pantry windows. He saw one in a bakeshop window, three layers with crinkled frosting. It looked complicated. He suddenly hated all cakes.

Back in front of the apartment he shifted from one foot to the other. Half an hour more to wait. It couldn't do any harm to sniff outside the door. One sniff was enough. He opened the door, the oven, the windows. Then he carefully sealed the marriage license and put it in his pocket.

"What a mess!" he groaned, surveying that thing which should have been a cake and was cinders all over the oven. He found a note on the table. "Glenn, dear," it read, "the cookbook says it should bake forty minutes. I've set the alarm and am resting." Glenn snatched up the clock and praying she wouldn't notice set it back ten minutes. He swept the debris from the oven into a newspaper and dashed out. On the way to the bakeshop he tossed it behind a billboard.

Half an hour later he held his breath while Alice opened the oven door. There on the rack was a three-layer cake with white crinkled frosting. "Perfect," he cried, holding her close.

It was Saturday and they were standing on the top deck of a liner watching New York sag irregularly into haze-fung sunset. Glenn's arm was about her and her scarlet beret snuggled against his shoulder.

"Glenn, dear," she murmured in a 'fessing-up' voice, "You don't know how near I came to spilling that pretty crinkled frosting. The recipe didn't say whether to put it on before baking or after and I almost didn't put it on. Wasn't it queer though," she added, "that it came out white when I made chocolate?"

"I saw that mess," she whispered, "and hid because I couldn't face you. But if you'd take that much trouble to cover your wife's blunders, well, I thought that if it didn't matter whether the frosting came first or last—"

She didn't finish, she couldn't. Glenn's lips were against hers. "Fraud," he whispered.

"Two frauds," she whispered back.

Summer Ice Skating at Fair

Winter weather all summer long is the novelty that is attracting thousands daily to the German Black Forest village in the new World's Fair at Chicago. Gigantic crowds are flocking to the new Street of Villages, for a "tour of the world" in a single day.

Crumbling Church Is an Ancient Rome Reminder

Strange vestiges of the days of ancient Rome when paganism was being supplanted by Christianity have come to light amid the crumbling remains of primitive churches at Spoleto, Italy. Archeologists have found that at the same time the famous Church of the Crucifix was built there in the Fifth century, a pagan temple was being constructed a short distance away but was later changed into a Christian church.

Tremendous significance is attached to the archeological finds at Spoleto because they show how two civilizations overlapped, the dying paganism of the old Romans and the rising Christianity of the new.

Here, chiseled out of stone in the Third or Fourth century, has been found one of the original Roman laws dealing with life in the woods. It has been translated to read:

"Nobody is permitted to carry away that which belongs to this forest except on the day when the annual sacrifice is made. Anyone who sacrifices a bull to Jupiter on any other day will be guilty of a sin and subject to a fine of 300 coins."

Historical Spots To Have Markers

Every spot of general historical significance in Illinois is to be designated by a special designed marker in a project initiated by Governor Henry Horner.

Officially sponsored by the Illinois Historical Society, which is defraying the cost of the work, erection of the markers has been started by the State Division of Highways. The first of the series was placed at Camp Butler National Cemetery, five miles east of Springfield on U. S. Route 36. Those in charge of the work hope that by the end of the summer, at least fifty of the markers will be in place. The entire program, however, contemplates the eventual marking of 200 sites rich in the historical lore of Illinois.
