Ford's Drama of Transportation at New Fair

In the largest exhibit ever built for an exposition, the Ford Motor Company will tell the complete story of transportation from the beginning of time, in the new World's Fair which opens in Chicago May 26. A special part of the exhibit will demonstrate Henry Ford's own solution to the farmer's problem. With 84 miles of free exhibits, the new Fair will again be a spectacular International attraction. Special attention will be paid to the comfort and convenience of visitors. Low railroad and bus rates, and low rates in Chicago hotels will cut the cost of a World's Fair vacation even as compared with the low costs of last year.

Benefits of Sunshine

With the advent of summer, prudent housewives bring their murky, yellowed household linens out for exposure once more in the bleaching, whitening influence of the sunshine.

Scientific study has proved that the direct rays of the sun's light exert a beneficial effect on fabrics that can be obtained in no other manner. Drying away from the influences of open air and sunlight lacks the value to be had from summertime, outdoor drying.

"Wind and sun are the final two important factors in the correct cleaning of clothes," says a home economics expert.

Direct sunshine fades non-fast fabrics, but is beneficial except for that. Uncolored table linens, bedding and other white goods are fresher and sweeter through open-air drying. Colored fabrics get all the same benefits, the need being only to shelter them from the sharp, direct rays of the sun."

Executioner of 54

Death came peacefully in sleep to William C. Patterson, the world's oldest hangman and first electrocutioner, at his home in Hornell, N. Y., at the age of 84.

Mr. Patterson was hangman at Auburn prison, New York, for years before the electric chair was substituted for the rope, and during his long service as executioner had put 54 convicted criminals to death.

These included Kemmler, the wife-slayer, the first man to meet death in the electric chair; Mary Farmer, first woman to be so executed; Leon Czogosz, the assassin of President McKinley, and many others whose crimes attracted world-wide attention.

Shortly before his death, when asked whether he believed he had ever executed an innocent person, Mr. Patterson said: "It is a good rule of life to mind your own business. I was not employed at Auburn as a judge."

His was a grim record, but he seems to have taken his job philosophically, and from the ripe age he attained, it appears that if he was ever haunted by memories of his victims, his days were not materially shortened thereby.

Stupidity of War

Everyone who thinks about it must realize the absurdity of placing two armies of men in the field to kill each other, when the men themselves have no personal grudge against those whom they are supposed to kill, nor any definite idea of what it is all about.

This was strikingly illustrated some time ago in China where two opposing generals, Marshal Ho and General Lu, both secretly deserted their armies and fled to Japan. Not knowing that their leaders had departed, the contending armies fought on for eight hours.

When it was discovered that the generals had gone, the two armies threw down their arms and mingled with each other in friendly fashion. This incident is vouched for by the treasurer of the Episcopal mission at Shanghai.

Opposing troops of civilized nations, have fraternized in many wars during periods of truce. A large number of American soldiers married German girls after the world war. The common people have nothing to do with war, except to do the fighting, the suffering and the dying.

While America must not allow a misguided pacifism to weaken her capacity for defense, her voice always should be raised in protest against the stupidity of war.

A Noble Bequest

Another fine example of the growing tendency toward benevolence on the part of wealthy men is seen in the will of the late S. Davies Warfield, president of the Seaboard Air Line Railway and official in numerous other large enterprises.

Mr. Warfield left an estate, estimated to be between five and ten million dollars for the founding of a home for dependent aged women. It will be located at his Manor Glen farm near Monckton, Md., and will be called the "Anna Emory Warfield Home," in memory of his mother.

Beginning as a clerk, Mr. Warfield rose to high eminence in the industrial and banking world. He was one of the leaders in the amazing development which has taken place in the south during the last two decades. His high character and humanitarian impulses may be judged by the noble bequest he made for the care of unfortunate aged women.

The home which his beneficence will establish will stand as a monument to his useful life and as a memorial to the devoted mother who gave him birth.

How To Please The Burglar

While everyone else is on vacation, the burglar has his busiest season. L. A. Sawyer, burglar expert of the National Bureau of Casualty and Surety Underwriters, says there are certain signs that always gladden his heart.

He likes to see an accumulation of milk bottles and newspapers at doors, and always is pleased to note that mail boxes are full to running over with letters and circulars.

He approves of windows that have shades pulled down.

He becomes much more confident when he sees the garage door open, and notes that the car is gone.

The burglar, continues Mr. Sawyer, is delighted to find doors fastened with fragile locks that give way to the slightest pressure. He has praise for the householder who depends upon simple catches for windows which are accessible from the ground, the roof, fire-escape or from broad copings along which he can climb. He does not like such things as thumb screw catches which hold the window firm; he cannot get at them with a jimmy.

Inside the house the burglar likes to find that the housewife has placed all of her silver in a compartment of the sideboard. He likes to find the furs in a moth bag with opera cloaks and special dinner gowns.

If there is one thing that adds zest to the search of the visitor it is the practice of some housewives in hiding jewelry and money under carpets, rugs, in carelessly hung clothing, or in mattresses, pillows or the davenport. It is a game to him and he knows all the plays. It does not take long for him to win.

What the burglar does not like is to find strong locks on doors, special protection on windows, extra catches on dumbwaiters, and after entering, to discover that all the movable valuables have been stored elsewhere.

The Ladies Aid society of St. John's Evangelical church will hold an ice cream social Wednesday evening, June 27, at the church.

He—Then I guess you never tried to steer one.

Caller—I suppose you will raise some string beans this year Mrs. Junebride?

Mrs. Junebride—Yes, one or two strings.

Small Boy—My dad's got a new set of teeth.

Friend—What are they goin' to do with the old ones?

Small Boy—I s'pose they'll save 'em and cut 'em down for me.

Assistant Editor—Here's a subscriber who wants to know why they whitewash the inside of chicken houses.

Editor—Tell him it's to keep the chickens from picking the grain out of the wood.

Wife—Henry, did you mail that letter I gave you to send by air mail?

Henry—Why, darling, I did my best. I whistled the airman to come down for it as he flew over the house but he went right ahead.

Teacher—We borrowed our numerals from the Arabs, our calendar from the Romans, our banking from the Italians. Now can anybody think of other examples of the same sort?

Willie Smith—We borrowed our lawnmower from the Robeys, our snow-shovel from Browns, and our baby carriage from the Jimsons.

On Its Tip-Toe Wheels It Set a New Standard of Farm Power

The Oliver Hart-Par Row Crop with its 18 horse power draw-bar pull, operating through its tip-toe wheels has set a new standard of farm power for row crop and diversified farming.

The wheels are narrow—the axle high—the equipment mounted so that you can work right up to the end of the row—but without disturbing the growing crops. Rear wheel brakes, that operate with the steering wheel give the Row Crop quicker, closer control.

The cultivating and planting equipment, in practically all cases, is mounted ahead of the operator, so that he always has a full view of the work. The ability of the gangs to both float and penetrate independently gives an evenness of planting and cultivation unknown in tractor work before. The tip-toe wheels give positive traction. They pack the soil so very little that a spike harrow completely removes their tracks.

Don't go into this season until you see it—the Oliver Row Crop—on its tip-toe wheels with complete equipment.

Jimmie's Secret
By HAZEL ARNOLD

© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate
WNU Service

CAROL looked at Jimmie with mingling eyes. He was drawing pictures to the infinite delight of her little sister. His boyish interest in his own pictures was reflected in his face—the face of a man to whom life would always be interesting and lively though others found it just the opposite.
“Jimmie, you're nothing but a big, good-natured boy. Do you realize that you want me to marry you in June, and that you haven't even a job?” she asked frankly.
He smiled his friendly smile. “Don't worry, Honey, it will all come out in the wash. I'll get going one of these days, and then everything will be fine and lovely.”
She laughed a little bitterly. “But I do want a home, and I want you—and I don't want to wait too long—and perhaps be unhappy afterwards.”
He sprang up, caught her in his arms, and folded her close. “You wait,” he said with smiling eyes, “you'll see.”
After he had gone, she went into the living room where her father was reading.

“Carol, you can do as you wish, but so far as I can see, Jimmie hasn't a job, and I can't see that he is trying to get one. You like him because he's good-natured and easy-going. You used to think a lot of Roy Thompson. He can give you a good home, he's a likable fellow,” her father said.
She nodded. “I told Roy he could take me for a ride this evening. I like him, but—I don't know—”
When, later in the evening, snuggled warm and cozy in the front seat of Roy's powerful roadster, she began to wonder more and more.

They swept out to the mountain road, and slipped over the gorgeous miles to a little inn, perched far above the valley. He seemed to be a part of his surroundings, winning from the waiter attention that Jimmie would never be given in his boyish, careless ways.
Under the spell of his attention and the moonlit evening, a slow weakening of her liking for Jimmie began to appear; and she knew that if on the way home, Roy should ask her the one question she wanted him to ask and yet was fearful he would ask, she might give him the answer he wanted.
As the long wide concrete road opened before them, his right hand sought hers.
“Carol, I wish we could have many rides like this—as man and wife—” he began.

Then fate intervened. The car began to jerk and slow down. The engine choked and died.
He clambered out, muttering. He tried this and tried that. His anger mounted in his impatience. “I'll have to go back and telephone to a city garage from the farmhouse,” he said shortly.
When he returned, he sat in the car in muttering, disgruntled disgust, after announcing help was coming.
The minutes passed. Roy grew impatient.

“But, Roy, it will take time—” she started to say.
“Time? I guess I know it as well as you do! But they've had time enough!” he said curtly. “I'm going back and phone again.”
Silence again, and time for thought. She wondered if he would always be as impatient and curt at things that went wrong—at her.
A car came swiftly up the grade. It stopped. “Here it is, fellows. In trouble all right,” a cheery voice called.

Carol jumped. It was Jimmie's gay voice. A man came up to the car and questioned her. Carol watched from the depths of her furs as Jimmie went at the engine. How did he happen to be with them? A man got in beside her to work the starter at Jimmie's orders.
“Who is he?” she asked, motioning.
“An expert,” the man said. “He's been at the day automobile school all the month and worked nights in our shop. He's a wonder.”
The engine roared. “All O. K.” Jimmie said cheerily. “All aboard. Let's beat it back.”
The car swept away. So that was what he had been doing—studying during the day and working nights, and keeping it from her—planning to surprise her in his boyish way.

Roy Thompson came angrily up. “They've come and gone, Roy,” she told him.
He climbed in and started the car with a rush. His irritation hung over them like a cloud the rest of the way. When he stopped at her home, he tried to detain her.
“Roy, it's useless. I know—simply know we would never be happy together,” she said with finality.
In the house she called the garage from which aid had come and asked for Jimmie. He answered her greeting:
“Why, honey, I was going to surprise you. I wanted to make good at this first, so kept it a secret. I go to the head of the mechanical department next month—means the little house, some cake with frosting on it, too. Say, don't you want me to come up and tell you all about it, now the secret's out? Want me to?”
She answered happily. “Oh, I do—please come!”

Man From the North

POLLY read the letter and tossed it carelessly to her roommate.

"Darling, here's a chance for one of your infernal practical jokes," she suggested, her cold eyes hiding in their darkness a faint twinkle. "That's from Allan Dyer. I met him last summer up North. He was good looking enough but a bit rusty in appearance—said he was camping on the lake and he looked it; and besides, he was poor. The man who interests me is the boy who can pay the waiter's check without looking as if he wondered how much it left him."

Carol smiled as she picked up the letter. "Your bright idea, my one, is for me to carry on your correspondence with him; is that it?"

"He writes an interesting letter, and you can string him along; and when I go up there next year, I can have him to play around with."

"Polly, you're heartless!"

"Mebbe so, little one, but this is a heartless age."

Carol mused over the letter. It was chatty and interesting, and suddenly she decided to answer it. Polly informed her, immediately, that Allan had never seen her handwriting, so the hoax would work.

Carol wrote the reply, employing some of Polly's characteristic phrases, amused and pleased herself at the way her letter shaped itself.

A week later, Allan's reply came, and Carol learned something of his life. It seemed he was working in a lumber camp, and the letter told of his life there.

The letters began to interest her keenly, although she took care to keep the discovery from Polly who found the letters only mildly interesting and soon stopped reading them.

Slowly a personal note crept into the letters. Before she realized it, the same mood was upon her.

"Here's a nice situation!" Carol told herself one evening. "Writing Polly's letter to a chap who evidently is thinking of her tenderly, while I'm beginning to think of him the same way! I'll drop him!"

But she found it much easier to say it than to do it.

Polly left for a two weeks' trip for her firm, and with her bright, somewhat cynical presence absent from the room, Carol found it easier to dream and muse over the man to whom she was writing.

Polly had been gone only a few days when Carol went to the door to learn from the maid that "A man from the North" would like to see her.

Carol was stunned. "But she isn't here, Kate!"

Kate grinned. "He said if Polly wasn't here, he liked to see any friend of hers."

Carol thought a moment. "Send him up, Kate," she said with decision, but her mind was fluttering.

Carol went to the window. A long, powerful-looking roadster was at the curb. "It can't be Allan," she told herself.

The door opened into their living room, and a man, brown of face, and almost filling the doorway, faced her.

"I'm sorry to learn that Polly is away, but glad that you are here." His gray, fine eyes were friendly. "You see, I'm right from the woods, hungry for a good time, and I hope you will run around with me a little—some plays, dances, etc."

Carol laughed inwardly as she thought of the joke on Polly.

They did play around—a gay, gorgeous week. He seemed to have plenty of money that he spent freely but wisely, and he certainly was good company.

"Oh, this is awful!" Carol moaned one night, as she tossed her evening dress aside. "I'm in love with him and he's in love with Polly! And when Polly gets here—Gosh! what a mix-up!"

She saw no solution, but one came the next evening. They were at a corner table in one of the delightful places he knew. He had been musing a bit.

"Carol, I was lonely up North at the camp. You see, my father owns the business, and I was up there winning back after a bad dose of pneumonia. The letters that came, so cheery, amusing, pulled me out of dark hours; I made up my mind that the girl who wrote them should play with me and be with me all the rest of my life. Now are you willing?"

Carol ceased to breathe. "But—my dear—I—how did you know I wrote the letters? I—really—"

A strong, steady hand lay upon her trembling one. "Through a friend I learned that Polly had gone on a business trip, but the letters came from your address just the same; and besides, the last of the letters sounded to me—well—as I know you now," he said gently.

"But Polly—" she began.

"The point of it is—do you care a bit for me?" he said quietly.

The somewhat dizzy world around her cleared. She was looking into the strong but tender face of the man she loved. She let her hand turn and clasp his.

"Of course I do, Allan. I have since your first letter arrived."
