The Passion Play

will flock to Oberammergau, Germany, this summer to witness the world-famous Passion Play, which has been performed in that humble mountain village at intervals for 300 years. This year's season began on May 21, and the last performance will be given on September 23.

According to tradition, when the town was menaced by the plague in 1634 the village made a vow to give a play every 10 years depicting scenes pertaining to the life and death of Christ if they were spared. Believing that they were saved from the plague through divine intervention, the vow has been kept throughout the succeeding three centuries.

Usually the Passion Play is presented on years whose numception is made this year in order to commemorate the 300th anniversary of the villagers' vow.

Each performance is given in daytime, from 8 in the morning ed for man's sustenance is burnuntil 6 in the afternoon, with an intermission of two hours at damage is wrought." noon. This year 28 performances will be given.

Considerable interest on the part of Americans is manifested in the person of Fraulein Klara Mayr, who plays the role of Mary Magdalene this year, because she has lived in the United States and expects to marry and make her permanent home in Washington this fall, after the papers. close of the Passion Play season.

With the announcement of price reductions several weeks ago, Chevrolet stepped into the most favorable price position it has enjoyed in a long time!

Reductions amounting to as much as $50-the most substantial price cuts announced in the low-price field this year-dropped Chevrolet's base price to a new low figure of $465. Just compare this price-compare any Chevrolet price-with those of other cars. Then compare what you get for what you pay! There'll be no question in your mind which car to buy,

Chevrolet offers patented Knee-Action-and others do not! The same thing applies to Fisher body, cable-controlled brakes, shock-proof steering, and valve-in-head six-cylinder engine. Chevrolet gives you far more features-far finer quality. Yet the price of the Chevrolet Standard is lower than that of any other six or any eight in the world. Army Home

JOST army romances end with a newspaper account of the bridal couple emerging from an arch of crossed swords, but this particular romance of young Lieutenant and Mrs. April 30th, 1935, inclusive. Rodney Ashurst goes on.

The first night, on their way by car to Rodney's post in the South, they stopped at the best hotel in Baltimore and had jellied consomme, broiled bluefish and peach melba, which they didn't eat. The second night, they stopped at an exclusive hotel in Roanoke and had cantaloupe, fried chicken and blueberry pie, some of which they ate. The third night, after a consultation over the honeymoon pocketbook, they stopped at the second best hotel in the thirtieth day of April, A. D. 1935, the same being as follows: Greenville and had a dollar blue plate, almost all of which they ate. On the fourth day they reached their destination, the army post to which Rodney had been assigned after his graduation from West Point that June.

A stout captain in the quartermaster corps met them at headquarters and ushered them to their new home. It was one of a group of unpainted wooden shacks that resembled squatters' huts one finds on ash heaps outside large cities. From their patched, tarred roofs tin chimneys emitted billows of soft coal smoke.

The captain got out, pried open a rusty, sagging screen door and waved the bride and groom inside, then left them with a cheery smile. He was so used to showing hardened army folk into dingy quarters that he didn't stop to sympathize with these young newcomers.

Sally Ann buried her head in Rodney's shoulder and wept heartbreak-

"I'm sorry, kiddie," he groaned. "What'll we do?"

"I know what I'm going to do," announced Sally Ann, hysterically but firmly. "I'm going home." But she decided to stay for two months, for after all, they were still on their honeymoon. But when the day came for her to go she didn't feel the least bit like traveling.

When they realized what was the matter, Rodney was terrified and begged her to go. If he hadn't suggested it, she probably would have. But she stayed. She would let Rodney see little Rodney, then leave for-

Winter descended upon them, a chill, rainy winter that spread a vast duck pond about their little low shack. Sally Ann shut off one room of the house and tried to keep it warm with the pot-bellied stove which, with its sister, the kitchen range, comprised the heating system of the house.

At last, one spring day, the great event took place. Sally Ann spent an afternoon walking on the hot roof garden of the army hospital with Rodney pacing desperately at her side. Then the nurses brought her in and told Rodney to stay out.

After a long while they told him he could go in.

"You have a cute little daughter," they said, "and girls are just as nice as boys." He merely glanced at the bundle on its way out to the nursery, cried for a few moments over Sally Ann's placid white face and went back to his little lonely shack. Lying in the pleasant, yellow-walled hospital, Sally Ann was more determined than ever to leave Rodney and his dreadful little hut. She simply couldn't let her baby grow up there, to play on those damp floors and perhaps get hold of the deadly white insect powder they were always compelled to have about.

At her father's home there would be a sunny nursery with warm, rugged floors and steam heat, sizzling against the frosty windows.

When they at last took Sally Ann back to the shack, she resolved that the next time she went out of it would be the last. Rodney gently deposited her on the quartermaster settee and she looked about.

A medley of colors met her gaze. The rough ugly boards were covered with yellow wall paper. Various pillows of clashing cretonne were carefully plopped on all the chairs. On the wavy floor, newly coated with orange shellac, was a tan rug that was not half bad.

Rodney grinned. "Do you like it?" he asked, proudly. "I did it all myself. This is a real home now, isn't it, kiddie?"

Sudden tears scalded Sally Ann's eyes. Yes, this was home-this funny, terrible little shack that the government had provided and that Rodney had so valiantly tried to make livable. Thousands of army women, for generations had lived in worse.

She looked at Rodney and smiled bravely. "I told you that I was going home after the baby came," she said. "Well, Rodney, I am home."

Largest Electric Shovel The Engineering News-Record says that the largest power shovel in use today, according to its records, is not a steam shovel in the full sense of the word, but is an electric shovel. Steam as power for large shovels has been replaced largely by electric power or diesel engines. This electric shovel is in use in an open-strip coal mine at Duquoin, Ill. It weighs 1,750 tons and required 58 freight cars for transportation to the work. It has a bucket capacity of 20 cubic yards, which is the amount of material that can be handled in one operation. This material would weigh about thirty tons.
