Fish Fall Prey To John Barrymore's New Gadget

The great John Barrymore, who will appear Sunday and Monday at the Illinois Theater, Newman, in the hilarious film comedy, "20th Century," invented a new gadget on his recent fishing trip in Mexican waters, an underwater light for still fishing. A thin glass tube, painted on the inside with radium paint so that the light radiates in all directions, was Barrymore's brain child. He hung it on fishing lines above the baited hooks to attract deep water fish.

"Funny thing about it, Barrymore commented, was that we had been getting plenty of fish, but when we began using the radium light we didn't get any. So it was not as successful as other gadgets I have devised. One of these is a new type flasher for trolling yellowtail. Could not describe it—it needs a photograph to show it clearly."

Chevrolet Establishes Production Record

Chevrolet Motor Company established a production record for the month of July, building 92,947 passenger cars and trucks the highest July production since 1929, according to an announcement made by the officials of the company.

To meet the demands of dealers, which continued on a high level during the month, the heavy production schedule was maintained. In the last four full working days of the month 16,901 units were produced with a record of 4,953 cars in a single day.

Handicapped by a late start in the early part of the year, Chevrolet production set a pace during March and April which was maintained through June, July, and the early part of August. It is significant to note that at the close of production on Saturday, August 4, Chevrolet had surpassed last year's total production figure, building 626,303 units as compared with 626,277 units for the entire 12 months of 1933.

July sales rivaled the June record in reflecting the current demand for Chevrolet cars. Deliveries made during July totaled 86,570 units, officials of the company said.

Parking On Hard Road Invites Danger

Parking on the hard road, is to invite danger or even death, no matter how good the reason, Secretary of State Edward J. Hughes said in a safety bulletin issued by his automobile department today.

"Traffic on the highway moves along at top speed regardless of the emergency which causes an autoist to stop," the statement said, "so it is incumbent upon every driver to draw far enough away from the concrete when forced to stop so that tragedy may not be added to his difficulties.

"Many drivers are thoughtless. They don't think.

"There is wisdom behind each provision laid down for use of the hard roads, decided upon after years of experience. When the rule was added, forbidding a driver to stop on the hard road, it was a safety measure that considered both the driver and other autoists.

"Highway tragedies which have come lately as a result of disregard of this measure prove its wisdom. A flat tire may incline a driver to overlook that rule, but with what dire consequences sometime. A machine in a moment's time may turn out of its lane to avoid striking a parked car and crash into a car coming from the other direction.

"Barren regrets of so many thoughtless drivers might be saved if they would only put themselves in others' places. The Golden Rule would help prevent a lot of tragedies."

$1,000 a Week Baby

Admirers of little Shirley Temple, 5-year-old movie star will be glad to know that she has been granted a substantial raise in salary, which has jumped from $150 a week to $1,000 a week. In addition, her mother is to receive $250 a week for accompanying her at the studios.

Many remarkable child stars have been seen on the silver screen in recent years, but it is said that none has ever scored such a rapid and complete success with patrons of picture theaters as has Shirley Temple.

She is the daughter of George F. Temple, a branch bank manager in Santa Monica, Calif., who sticks to his modest job in spite of his gifted daughter's rise to fame and fortune. But he did take a hand in getting her big salary boost, which the Fox film people agreed to after considerable wrangling.

Shirley has never been to school but expects to start this fall. She receives lots of fan mail, but it is not read to her as her parents do not want her to become spoiled or too self-conscious. If they have told her about her new salary she can hardly realize how much money $1,000 a week really is. Neither can we.

Canal 20 Years Old

Twenty years ago on August 15 the Panama Canal was opened, but during its early years traffic was not great, owing to land slides which closed the channel from time to time, and also because of the reduced movement of shipping due to the war.

The canal was not declared officially opened until 1920, since when about 70,000 commercial toll-paying vessels have passed through it, paying tolls exceeding $300,000,000. In addition, many American warships and other government vessels have used the canal toll-free.

Up to 1933 expenditures in building and improving the canal had reached 540 million dollars, the interest on which at 3 per cent is more than 16 million dollars a year.

Contrary to the general belief, the Panama Canal has not been a paying proposition for the United States government, when its investment in the project is considered. During the past few years the deficit has exceeded four million dollars a year. The only way in which the canal can be considered an asset to the federal government is by taking into account its supposed value to the national defense.

Whether the canal could be defended against a first-class power in time of war is one of the country's important military problems. This problem did not arise during the World War, as the Central Powers had no fleet in either the Atlantic or Pacific after the United States entered the struggle.

Sidelights

No Tugwell law was needed to handle the case of Willie McKnight, a negro of Jackson, Miss., who sold a "hair straightener" found to contain lard, flour and lye. Customers declared the stuff was a poor straightener, but as a hair remover it was a great success. Willie is in jail under a fraud charge.

Better sorghum syrup is promised as a result of new processes of manufacture developed by government chemists, which will also enable syrup makers to turn out a more uniformly good product. At present the difference in quality between the highest and lowest grades is very great, the best bringing about three times as much as the poorest.

Thousands gathered at the little town of Beaurain, Belgium, recently to witness the appearance of the Virgin Mary, which was predicted to occur at 5:30 p. m. on a certain day. Of course, there was no such appearance, but many no doubt imagined they saw the expected apparition. Such is the power of superstition, even in the twentieth century.

Diving in a New Jersey lake, Harry Robeson, 28, found a bracelet on the bottom. When he showed it to his wife she said it had been given her by a former sweetheart 10 years ago, but when they had a spat while canoeing she threw it in the lake. As the bracelet had no further sentimental value for either of the Robesons it was sold to an old gold dealer.

Buddhists of Tibet believe that when a ruling Grand Lama dies his soul immediately enters the body of a child born at that instant. Since the death of the former Grand Lama on Dec. 17, 1933, search has been made for a successor. It is reported that a child has been found in the interior of the country who was born at the exact minute that the Grand Lama died. If the abbots and regents are satisfied with the date of birth, this unknown baby will become the head of three million Tibetan Buddhists.

The exceptional popularity which Chevrolet has enjoyed for many years has naturally had its effect on Chevrolet prices. Large sales have enabled Chevrolet to maintain consistently low purchase prices, which were recently lowered even further. As a result Chevrolet now offers you the lowest priced six-cylinder automobile obtainable—a big, comfortable car with Fisher Body styling and refinement—safe, weatherproof, cable-controlled brakes—the smoothness and economy of a valve-in-head, six-cylinder engine—and typical Chevrolet dependability. In offering this car, and the Master models, at substantially lower prices, Chevrolet hopes to repay the motoring public in some measure, for consistently placing Chevrolet so high in public favor.

Robin Tells Why

By FRAN BEVERLY

© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate
WNU Service

PATTERSON sat down in the semi-darkness of his library and prepared to listen alone, for the last time to the voice he loved best in all the world. After that, when he had heard each record, he would destroy them all.

An hour previously he had posted the letter to Dorothy Dunbar, asking her to become his wife. The die was already cast and he would henceforth endeavor to put dreams of his boyhood sweetheart completely from his life; but not before he had heard once again each of her glorious songs.

It seemed but yesterday—though a full fifteen years had passed—that he and Sally Pendleton had wandered arm in arm through the sweet-smelling country lanes and he had pleaded with her to marry him. She was seventeen but she had announced her intention to become a great singer and had refused to marry him.

"I know as well as if it were written on the sands," she had told him, "that if we marry now I will utterly fail to carry out my ideals in music. If you will wait for me—I will love no one but you."

But Patterson in his immature reasoning and the impatience of youth had turned from her. He wanted her then or not at all. If she loved her voice better than she loved him she must choose her own way.

Of course, Patterson knew of Sally Pendleton's success as all the world did. But he knew not where she was nor would he have followed had he known. She was somewhere in the world singing, but not in his part of the world. He knew now that he had committed a great folly in his youth; he had been ungenerous, small, jealous. However, Dorothy Dunbar was a sweet woman, and no doubt they would be tremendously happy.

Sally's songs at seventeen had been, "Won't You Tell Me Why, Robin?" "In the Gloaming," "The Lost Chord," "Ye Banks and Braes," and Patterson had managed to secure them all for his talking machine.

He was so deep in his dreams and so regretful of their imminent passing that he was only half-conscious that a voice, not that of the machine, was singing through, "Won't You Tell Me Why, Robin?"

Patterson's heart beat rapidly and he gripped the arms of his chair in a tenseness of emotion he had not known for years. For Patterson's name was Robin and the emotion in that voice told him that Sally Pendleton was in the same building calling to him.

He must go. Down the elevator he went and swiftly to the office of the apartment house to make inquiry. A lady had arrived during the afternoon, yes—her name was not, however, Pendleton.

Patterson's heart sank. Was it then not his Sally? Or worse still was it Sally and was she married? He could not contemplate the thought and rushed off to the rooms mentioned by the clerk.

She opened the door to her suite of rooms and Patterson found himself speechless with emotion.

"Robin—Robin Adair," she cried, using the old pet name.

"My Sally," was all Patterson could say, and the Sally was in his arms and she was trembling and Patterson could only hold her close.

"Then it was you—listening to my voice?" she asked presently. "It doesn't seem possible. The great hand of fate—isn't it, Robin?" Her voice was unsteady.

"I have listened to your voice ever since the first record came out, and in my soul—I have heard it—before that."

She was leading him into the spacious sitting room. "And now tell me everything. I am hungry to hear you talk. I sneaked into the country under an assumed name so that I might have a few months away from my public—they demand so much of me."

"You are not married?" She looked wistfully at him. "I told you fifteen years ago I would always love you, Robin."

Suddenly Robin realized the terror of the situation. His letter of proposal to Dorothy was even then in her hands—no doubt she was writing him her answer and Patterson knew it would be "yes."

"Sally, my own," he said swiftly, "I have had no one in the depths of my heart sleeping or waking for fifteen years, and now, now when I had given up hope of your seeking me out, I have asked another girl to marry me. I have never wanted to seek you because I felt too unworthy and small. Now I know I have been a first-class idiot. I shall love you always."

Sally was struggling to keep from crying out, but in a moment she smiled.

"Robin, my dear. There is no power to keep true lovers apart in the spirit, and I feel certain that fate will in some way give us to each other."

"You were always faithful, Sally—I—" Robin dived into the depths of his pocket for the inevitable cigarette that he felt he must have under stress and suddenly his face went a dull crimson—a triumphant crimson, however. He drew forth an envelope, it was stamped and addressed. "Sally! I didn't post it!"

What sort of a world would this world be, if everybody were just like me?

Mr. Newlywed—What's wrong with this pie crust, darling? It doesn't half cover the pie.

Mrs. N.—I asked your mother how to make pies to suit you and she said to make the crust very short.

On Top of the Bus

THERE was a touch of fall in the air. It was brisk and refreshing on the upper deck of the New York bus as it whisked its way along Riverside drive.

Not many people had taken advantage of the clear freshness of the open air. But there were two children watching eagerly for the unusual either on the Hudson or along the streets. Two seats behind them there sat a man and a woman. The woman, a pleasant looking individual, was obviously disturbed.

"You know as well as I do, the children and I can't live on that."

Across the aisle the two small boys were jumping up and down; gay animated little figures.

"Oh, mother!" shrieked the younger one, pointing overhead, "a drigible!" No attention was paid by the older people to the youngster.

The man's voice was low. "It's a wonder I'm able to attend to business with all the complicated plans for separate homes," he said, "let alone the children. Their training is mainly your job, anyway."

"Well," she went on, "as I told you, the children and I can't possibly live on the amount you propose."

"You don't seem to realize I'm giving you practically all I make," the man reminded her.

"I notice you're not giving up any of your clubs," she pointed out.

"And why should I?" he retorted. "What do you expect me to do with my evenings? Spend them in the movies?"

"No, I don't expect you to spend your evenings in the movies. I expect you'll spend them right where you've been spending them for the past seven months."

"I fail to see why you have to drag Grace into this," he muttered. "You know very well my seeing her was merely on business. She needed legal advice and I gave it to her."

"In all due respect, Tom, Grace had very odd moments for needing advice, legal or otherwise. After all, you have office hours, you know."

The man was indignant. "Just because she received a beastly telegram from that wretched husband of hers, and wanted to know what to do, you call it odd moments. It was only during dinner."

She sighed. "That's always the way with Grace, Tom. Only this, only that. As though Grace out of the entire city's women needed special advice about her husband."

"I suppose a husband should feel delighted to come home every night and find an infernal doctor draped around the house!"

"Tom!" She turned to him almost fiercely, but then laughed—seeing how sullen his face was. "You're nothing but a child yourself!"

She paused before continuing in a more serious tone.

"That was one of the reasons I spoke about having more to live on. Not for myself, but Junior isn't any too robust."

The man searched her face. A surprised, alarmed expression spread across his regular, clear-cut features.

She continued a little shakily. "The doctor says I'll have to be taking him away every now and then. Drier climate, higher altitude."

The man would have interrupted but she went on. "That's the reason you've seen Doctor French draped around the house so often."

"But you never told me anything about it!" the man exclaimed. He looked hurriedly across the aisle at his younger son. The lad was a little pale.

"You never gave me a chance, Tom. If you looked tired when you came home I'd decide to tell you later. And then sometimes I'd have to call Doctor French and aside from being barely civil to him you wouldn't talk to me for days. So you see I kept postponing it."

Tom was deep in reverie. "All I could think of was that he'd once wanted you to marry him," he muttered.

"You seem to forget I married you," she reminded him.

"You mean you're not interested in him. You're not . . .?"

"Tom, you idiot!" He was beaming. "Jean, take the kiddies to some ranch next summer and let me go along, too."

But Jean could not resist a final thrust. "What about Grace? She'll be needing advice most of the time, and a ranch is no place to commute from."

"Who's childish now?" he wanted to know. "Anyway, Grace sails on her honeymoon tomorrow."

"Her honeymoon," exclaimed Jean. "Who's the man?"

"Who would it be?" retorted Tom. "The same wife-beater she's been weeping and walling for me to free her from these many months!"

Jean broke into gales of laughter at his retort, but Tom had an insistent question. "You haven't answered me," he reminded her.

She looked dubious. "Answered what?"

"Will you or will you not . . . no, I'll make a fresh start. Will you please take me along with you and the children to the ranch?"

"I'd love to."

He didn't say anything, just gripped her hand more tightly.
