Large Crowds For University Games

Champaign, Ill., Oct. 3.—With every mail bringing in orders in a constant stream for the big home football games, Ohio State and Army, branch ticket offices frantically telephoning for more tickets and a steady counter sale in progress, it is like old times in the Illinois ticket office.

All signs now point to a large crowd for the Ohio State Red Grange homecoming game and a larger one for the invasion of the West Point cadets. The advance sale for these engagements is the largest here in four years and optimists are beginning to discuss the possibility of a sell-out for Army, as well as the largest homecoming crowd for Ohio State since 1930.

The last time the Memorial Stadium was sold out was in 1929 the previous visit of Army, when the Illini turned back Chris Cagle's gallant cadet invaders in a thrilling battle. The attendance, 69,509, was the largest at home in Illinois annals.

The stadium has been sold out four other times, all during the Grange years; for the opening game against Chicago in 1923, the dedication game against Michigan in 1924, when the famous red-head ran wild, and twice in 1925 with Michigan and Chicago as the opponents.

The biggest crowd of pre-stadium days appeared in 1920 when 19,921 wedged themselves onto Illinois field stands to thrill at the championship game with Ohio State. Mail bags full of letters were returned unopened and no one knows how many thousands more might have attended had there been space.

World's Largest Fountain Will End With World's Fair

A gleaming centerpiece for the millions of sparkling jewels that fill the night of A Century of Progress in Chicago is the circle of the great fountain, shown here. This spectacle, which has provided a thrill for millions of visitors from every corner of the earth, will be destroyed along with the rest of the exposition when the Fair closes its gates forever at midnight Oct. 31. Spectacular events, more colorful than any yet seen at the Fair, will fill the calendar for the final weeks, when America rushes for one last look at the nation's most successful international exposition. "The Ninth Guest" a Thrilling Mystery

Eight persons, friends, enemies, lovers, trapped in a penthouse high above New York City, battle a hidden and ruthless foe in the Columbia production, "The Ninth Guest," coming to the Broadlands Theater this Friday and Saturday nights.

Penthouses have superseded drawing rooms as locales for murder—on the screen at least. Usually the penthouse is used as a locale merely because penthouses are smart; in this story the penthouse is a necessary part of the plot, for the situation could not arise in a drawing room.

The eight are invited guests to a mysterious party high atop a large skyscraper. When assembled, they are told by a voice over the radio that they are in rapid succession to meet death. Escape is impossible. The doors are electrified and the nearest help is forty stories below on the street.

The penthouse setting in "The Ninth Guest" is one of the most elaborate yet produced for the screen. Donald Cook and Genevieve Tobin are the featured players.

The Robert Smiths Enjoy A Nine-Day Motor Trip

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Smith and son Harold have returned from a nine day motor trip through northern Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Iowa.

They first attended A Century of Progress at Chicago, driving from there to Milwaukee, Wis. At Watertown they went through the epileptic home, going from there to visit the Rev. Carl Boevers, a former pastor of Immanuel Lutheran Church of Broadlands. Martin Boevers, son of Rev. Boevers, is employed at the State Penitentiary at Waupun and took them on a sight-seeing tour of that institution.

Leaving Waupun, they drove through the dells, a scenic spot, visiting the Indian trading post there. From La Crosse, Wis., to Winona, Minn., they drove through the most picturesque part of their trip, a rugged and hilly region.

At Lewiston, Minn., they visited Rev. J. H. Hafner, another former pastor of Immanuel Lutheran Church of Broadlands.

Leaving Lewiston, they visited the Mayo Clinic at Rochester, Minn. They came home by way of Mason City, Iowa, where they visited with the Fred Frenz family.

Fall crops looked good in Wisconsin, but nowhere was there much forage, but a good potato crop.

The L. W. Class Is Delightfully Entertained

Mrs. Bessie Loomis, teacher of the L. W. class, assisted by Mrs. Ella Maxwell, treated the class to a wiener and marshmallow roast, last Friday afternoon, at the "old Loomis homestead."

An added feature was tacking a quilt, and to say we had fun is putting it mildly. Four birthdays were observed, namely Mesdames Ella Maxwell, Ruth Henson, Olive Rayl and Flora Bailey. Rev. Turner gave a very fitting talk.

Aunt Mary Fitzgerald thought maybe the house was falling down on her but it was only a piece of brick out of the chimney. She is also very fond of coffee and to make sure she would get plenty she poured some in her lap.

All members were present except one. Even Aunt Mary Rayl braved the rain and showed us she was nobody's sugar and wouldn't melt.

Five visitors were present, Mrs. Jessie Bergfield, Mrs. Ruth Henson, Mrs. Nora Griffin, Mrs. Mary Fitzgerald and Rev. J. F. Turner.

Pride of Ancestry

Honoring of parents of other worthy forbears is most commendable, but the extremes to which some people carry their pride of ancestry is somewhat amusing.

It has been pretty conclusively established by scientists that acquired characteristics of one lifetime can not be transmitted to posterity, and we have unlimited instances of worthless offspring from high-class parentage, while on the other hand many persons born in obscurity have made notable successes in life.

The divine right of kings was founded on ancestry, usually beginning with some political or military upstart. The American "400" was founded on the wealth of shrewd traders and schemers of the early days.

While in some sections the fetish of ancestry is still worshipped, it is becoming out of date, and nowadays a man must amount to something in his own right if he would be held in high esteem.

As a recent writer has well said: "Humanity's sense of justice would be outraged if descendants of a criminal justly hanged three hundred years ago, should still lie under the infamy of that ancestor. Why, then should glory attach to the worthless descendant of a hero?"

The Bright Boy

We hear a good deal about the necessity for special attention to dull children, and every aid which may be given these unfortunates ought to be given. But a lot of bright boys need some thought and practical assistance, too.

Education of the masses to a certain common level is to be desired, but unless the boy who shows exceptional talent can be given special opportunities to develop his latent powers, not only he, but the world at large, is the loser.

Thousands of mediocre boys go through college with little benefit to themselves or to society, while other thousands who have great gifts are denied the privilege, through lack of means.

That any boy with exceptional talent for creative work, scientific research or leadership should lack the opportunity to make the most of that talent is a tragedy. Upon such boys and their proper training depends the progress of the world. The same is true of especially talented girls.

When our civilization is a little farther advanced, means will be provided that our brightest minds shall have every opportunity for their highest development. Such means should be provided now.

A Wider Outlook

Although many writers deplore the alleged lower standard of current magazines which are extremely popular with a certain class of people, reports from booksellers and librarians declare that there is a growing demand for the better sort of literature.

Works dealing with travel, history and biography are being called for in increasing numbers, especially those pertaining to foreign countries.

There is no doubt that the war and the important events which have followed it have given the American people a wider outlook on the world and a desire to know more of the countries and peoples which are playing such important parts in its affairs.

Newspapers, generally, both dailies and weeklies, find that their readers are interested in a wider range of topics than formerly, and are giving more space to news and editorials dealing with national and international matters.

This all means that the people of America, and particularly the rural population, are outgrowing the narrow provincialism of the past and are eager for contact with the rest of the world, thru books, newspapers, moving pictures and the radio.

Rise of the Tomato

It seems a little strange to us that tomatoes were not used as human food by the white race until only a little more than a hundred years ago, being that poisonous. In fact, it is related that about 1833 a New Jersey child who had eaten a raw tomato was rushed to a doctor by her parents, who feared she would die.

There were early superstitions connected with the tomato, one of which was that they were eaten by witches, another that they were effective as love potions; in fact, they were first known as "love apples." Even in recent years it has been thought by some that eating of tomatoes tended to produce cancer, but science has refuted that idea, also.

Now the raising and marketing of tomatoes, both fresh and canned, has become a great industry. In 1931 more than 20 million cases of canned tomatoes were produced in the United States, including whole tomatoes, paste, pulp, sauce and juice.

The rise of tomato juice in popularity during the last five years has been most spectacular, increasing from an output of 195,251 cases in 1929 to about five million cases last year.

If tomato juice is really a love potion, it must be contributing very greatly to the emotional life of the present generation.

Motor Fuel Saving

The pocketbook of every motorist in America will be benefited by changes being made in automobile engines, according to Charles B. Bohn, president of the Bohn Aluminum and Brass Corporation, quoted in a recent periodical. "With minor changes in present engines we have obtained a tremendously greater output with superior fuel economy, says Mr. Bohn. The improvements lie in better combustion chamber design permitting higher compression without spark or gas knock, and higher engine speeds permitted by opening up the entire breathing system of the engine to a degree possible only with aluminum cylinder heads and proper combustion chamber design.

These improvements during the next two years will result in the saving of millions of dollars annually to the motorists of America. We have combustion chamber forms perfected which permit of higher compression without using anything but standard gasolines of good quality."

The average person does not realize that one-third of the fuel value in the gasoline tank is generally thrown away through the radiator. Although this cannot be eliminated, a more scientific arrangement of the cooling, particularly of the cylinder head, and by higher compressions and more complete combustion, can control it in a manner to reduce heat losses.

Technical details are of interest only to engineers, but the results are of vital importance to every car owner, as they materially affect his pocketbook.

Politicians sow applesauce in the hope of harvesting plums.

Public Ownership

For several years the government-owned Ontario power system has been held up by advocates of government operation of utilities as a shining example of cheap power under political management. Opponents of public ownership have charged that the power commission sold current to farm and household consumers often at a loss, in order to gain popularity among the mass of the voters and thus perpetuate its members in office.

A recent statement by T. Stewart Lyon, chairman of the government power commission, showed that the average cost of power delivered in Toronto had increased from $21.25 per horsepower in 1930 to $30.08 in 1933. Also, the reserve fund to the credit of the commission was reduced from $14,629,578 in 1931 to approximately $6,500,000 at present, a loss for the period of more than eight million dollars.

In 1933, Mr. Lyon said, power consumers of Toronto alone got their power for $825,000 less than it cost the government to deliver it.

When, as is by no means uncommon, a public-owned utility is operated at a loss, such as that shown by the Ontario system, the deficit is made up, of course, by taxation. Thus, although the consumer's power bill may be low, the public pays the loss through increased tax bills. There is no magic in public ownership whereby the people may get something for nothing.

Broken Engagements

By FRANCES SMITH

CAMILLA came running into the house where her fragile little aunt sat alone in a sunny window, her fingers busy with some dainty needlework. Agatha Andrews lifted her quiet gray eyes and saw the dark sparkling beauty of the girl, the rich coloring of youth and perfect health—and radiant joy.

"Auntie, I've had a darling time!" cried Camilla breathlessly whirling into a chair. "Guess who was there—and I met him!" she ended ecstatically. Agatha Andrews turned her fair face and looked out into the flower garden which seemed to waver uncertainly before her hurt eyes; the old blossom seemed to nod their heads and say, "I told you so—I told you so—some day—"

"You are not listening!" reproached the girl, for this aunt was mother and father to her and had been for many years since a fatal accident had deprived the child of both parents. "You haven't heard a word—I met such an important person at the garden party—we made heaps of money for the hospital—and he looked and looked at me until he seemed to realize that he was being rude; then Andy introduced him to me! Auntie, I have made a real conquest!"

"Goose," smiled Agatha. "Behold—the governor's future lady—"

"Camilla!" Miss Andrews had risen and was staring at her niece with wide, startled eyes in her white face. "What do you mean?"

"Nothing but my foolishness, dear," explained Camilla contritely. "I really did meet the governor himself and he was charming to me. He is coming to call tomorrow afternoon and we must have tea in the garden."

"Of course—" faltered Agatha.

"He asked after you, auntie, said he knew you years ago, when you were my age; he said there was a resemblance. Andy was frightfully jealous of him. Isn't he distinguished looking, and so calm and reserved with the twinkly look in his blue eyes? I adore him!" Camilla suddenly subsided in her changeable way, and looked dreamily into the gathering twilight.

"You mustn't hurt Andy's feelings, Camilla," advised Agatha in a troubled voice; "you know how devoted he is." "He seems so young and immature beside Governor Frayne. I told him so," she ended frankly.

"Told—Andy?" "Yes," carelessly "on the way home. He was quite like a bear about it—so we are no longer engaged!"

"Oh!" cried the older woman sharply; then, as if collecting her scattered forces, she added quietly, "I am sorry, dear. Andy is young, but that is a fault we all get over some day!"

Camilla laughed and kissed her warmly, but the slim finger where Andy's diamond had proudly gleamed was quite bare.

The next afternoon Camilla made preparations for serving tea in the rose-bowered veranda. Miss Andrews had silently helped her, making a loaf of very special pound cake that her mother used to bake. She gave the girl carte blanche where the china closet was concerned, and the consequence was that many bits of old china saw the light for the first time in many years. Agatha, dressed in a soft gray silk, with her graying hair pinned in a knot at her neck, looked like some pompadour figurine as she wandered restlessly about the garden. It was not until she heard voices at the house that she slowly went back to face the past.

There was Andy McDonald, stubbornly faithful in spite of his broken engagement, playing with Camilla's cat; and there was Camilla, radiating glorious youth, her dark bobbed hair blowing in the sweet evening breezes, her awed eyes lifted to Gilbert Frayne's face.

"Here she is at last!" cried Camilla, and the governor whirled around to stare for a moment at the slim figure coming slowly across the grass. The tea kettle bubbled furiously just then, and Andy and Camilla flew to subdue it, the governor went to meet Agatha, his blue eyes keen like a boy's.

"Agatha," he said simply as he took her hand in his, "you told me once upon a time to go away—you never wanted to see me again—"

"Yes," gasped Agatha faintly, her eyes seeking her refuge, the garden. "But one says so many foolish things—"

"Yes—and they hurt all through the years. What a young fool I was in those days not to come back to you."

"Yes," agreed Agatha softly.

"There is such a lot to explain—when I saw the child yesterday I was fascinated; I told myself it was either your daughter or a near relative—so I—came."

"I am—glad—you have been so successful," said Agatha, regaining her poise somewhat.

"Yes—in a measure," he said patiently, "but I came to find out today whether I shall be the only bachelor governor the state has ever known or—"

"They have gone into the rose garden," said Camilla indignantly.

"Why not? They were engaged to be married and quarreled twenty years ago—great scott, he's kissing your Aunt Agatha!" Andy turned his head away from the rose garden and encountered Camilla's brimming eyes. "Where's—my ring?" she asked.

The Girl They Didn't Forget
By MARGARET B. TOMSON
© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WSU Service

JACK WESTON, once heralded as "America's Playboy," before alimony and the stock market debacle had almost sunk him, turned with swift apologies to the well-built stranger standing beside him at the bar, whom he had just jostled with unwitting rudeness.
"Don't mention it," said Dick Bode, former All-American tackle, magnanimously.
Weston hesitated a moment, then spurred by the desire to confide in some one went on: "I was looking at that girl who just came in . . . the tall, dark one . . . she looks so much like a girl I used to know in Los Angeles that it startled me."
Bode's eyes turned in the direction indicated by Weston's eyes. "That's funny," he allowed musingly. "I knew a girl in Los Angeles who looked like her, too. Yes," he decided, craning his neck, "she certainly does look like Nancy."
"Not Nancy Ross," Weston said incredulously.
"You know Nancy?" the voice was eager.
"Know her?" murmured Weston reminiscently, "I should say I did. The best pal I ever had. Swell gal, Nancy!" "Swell gal!" echoed Bode warmly. Solemnly they drank to Nancy.
"What a coincidence," Weston shook his head in wonderment. "Seen her lately?"
"Not for five or six years."
"Swell gal!"
They toasted the girl they hadn't forgotten with another round.
"Never forget what she did for me one time," Weston remembered rather maudlinly. "Pulled me through one of the worst cases of delirium tremens you ever laid an eye on."
"Funny," said Bode suspiciously. "She hated that kind of thing. Only time she saw me awfully crooked, she bawled h—l out of me."
"She certainly was a swell little playmate," Weston confided. "Never got crooked, never got quarrelsome, always ready to go places and do things."
"Oh, I never found her that way," objected Bode. "Liked to go out, of course, but we used to go in for sports a lot. Nancy was a swell swimmer and handled a mean racket."
"Athletic!" Weston was incredulous. "Why, the only exercise she ever went in for was dancing until the orchestra packed up and went home."
There was a suspicious moisture in Weston's eyes. He certainly hadn't played square with Nancy. She had been awfully in love with him, too, and he had really intended to marry her. Then that blond had suddenly walked into his life and he never had had the strength to resist blonds.
Remorsefully Bode surveyed his empty glass. What a beast he had been to Nancy. Met her when he was just out of college and flat broke. Probably wouldn't have eaten for weeks at a time if it hadn't been for Nancy. She was always doing something for him. Of course she was terribly in love with him and he had asked her to marry him but that was no excuse for a man to sponge off a woman, he realized now.
The end came when he had an unexpected offer of a job in Chicago. He left in a rush, meant to write her but just carelessly put it off so long that he was finally ashamed to write. How could he have been fool enough not to realize that she had been the one and only woman in his life? It would be all right now, though. He'd go back and marry her and make up to her for all the tears she must have shed for him.
"My Nancy!" whispered Weston reverentially and a little tearful.
"My Nancy!" Bode challenged with sudden belligerence.
Just then Weston's fist connected with Bode's nose and the battle was on. "Nice places you take your wife to," sniffed Nancy Elliott loftily to her husband after watching two belligerent gentlemen being shoved unceremoniously through the door.
There was a mischievous glint in Nancy's eyes: "I think I used to know those two pugilists."
"Undoubtedly," groaned her husband. "Your list of scalps extended the length of the continent before I finally tamed you by sheer brute force."
"I didn't mind so much your knocking my teeth out," she said reminiscently, "but when you sliced my ears off . . . well, I've just practically never looked at a man since!"
"I was a weakling in those days," he said sadly. "That was before I learned to treat my women rough. Anyway, I still think it was positively immoral the way you got yourself engaged every time you powdered your nose."
"Not at all," she denied stoutly. "I practically never became engaged to anybody who didn't need my moral support at that particular time."
"Don't tell me you were engaged to those two birds," he begged.
"I don't remember," Nancy thought deeply. "Yes . . . yes, I was," she remembered suddenly. "But I got out of it all right," she assured him happily. "I introduced Jack to a man-eating blond I dug up somewhere. That was very simply."
"Dick was a little more difficult, though. I finally maneuvered it so that he got a job way, far away. However," her eyes widened pensively. "I had to become engaged to two other chaps to put that one over!"

You're The Loser
WHEN you allow Headache, Neuralgia, Muscular, Rheumatic, Sciatic or Periodic Pains to keep you from work or pleasure. You can't go places and do things when you are suffering—and the work or good times won't wait for you.
Why allow Pain to rob you of Health, Friends, Happiness, Money?
DR. MILES ANTI-PAIN PILLS have been used for the relief of pain for more than forty years. They taste good, act quickly, do not upset the stomach, nor cause constipation, leave no dull, depressed feeling.
Thousands have used them for twenty, thirty, forty years, and still find that nothing else relieves pain so promptly and effectively.
Why don't you try them? Once you know how pleasant they are to take, how quickly and effectively they relieve, you won't want to go back to disagreeable, slow acting medicines.
You too may find quick relief. Why wait forty minutes for relief when Dr. Miles Anti-Pain Pills will relieve you in ten to twenty minutes?

On the night October 1, 1934, 7:30, a regular meeting of the F. F. A. was held at the Long View Township High School, being the first one of this school term. The purpose of the meeting was to present the new pupils taking vocational agriculture to the F. F. A. organization.

The first thing on the program was the initiation of the "Green Hands," sponsored by a committee who were: James Beatty, Herschel Bruhn, Kenneth Bickers, Clyde Collins and Hoyne

Hales. After the initiation was over a meeting of all the boys was held in the Agriculture room, with Clyde Collins president, who took charge of the meeting.

Clyde Collins pointed out three boys who are supposed to plan a program for the next meeting. He also had a vote on which night of each month the meeting would be held, and the second Monday in each month was decided on.

W. B. Braeuninger, the vocational agriculture teacher gave a lecture on an activity contest which is being held for the F. F. A. boys. This contest awards a certain number of points to those who take part in the activities concerning the contest. The five boys getting most points get to take a trip next August.
