"So This Is Africa" With Wheeler-Woolsey

The Amazons and Tarzans, numbering more than 200, who cavort in some of the most laughable scenes in "So This Is Africa!" required 150 pounds of liquid make-up and the services of ten make-up men for three hours in order to transform that number of Hollywood extras into wild men and women of the jungle. It will be shown at the Broadlands Theater on Friday and Saturday nights of this week.

In this scene from Columbia's Wheeler-Woolsey comedy, which delivers a satiric dig at all Tarzan and animal films, the Amazons are about to devour Wheeler and Woolsey to the accompaniment of much love-making, when the Tarzans march into the enclosure and save them from a sad fate.

The directors spent three weeks scouring the extra ranks to find girls tall enough and robust enough to qualify as Amazons. They all had to be at least five feet, ten inches tall. The men for the Tarzan roles had to weigh at least 175 pounds and stand six feet, and be strong enough to carry an Amazon on their backs and run through the jungle with them.

The make-up men applying the dark liquid to their bodies which transformed their appearance so their own mothers wouldn't have recognized them, used huge white-wash brushes for their painting, and still it took hours.

Raquel Torres, Esther Muir, Henry Armetta, Eddie Clayton and many others constitute the excellent supporting cast.

The soybean harvest is practically completed in this vicinity with good yields averaging from 25 to 35 bushels per acre. Some of the farmers have finished shucking corn and some will finish in the next few days. Owing to the drouth and chinch bugs corn is of very poor quality ranging from 10 to 25 bushels per acre. A few fields in this vicinity produced better yields, but they were very few.

Cruelty To Animals

To one of human instincts it is distressing to witness the utter disregard of animal suffering which is shown by thoughtless or vicious persons.

Acts of unnecessary cruelty to dumb animals are an indication of either a lack of education or serious moral defect on the part of those who practice them. Children should be taught very early to treat animals with kindness. Without such teaching a child is very likely to develop cruel tendencies, particularly when the example of unfeeling indifference is set by older persons.

As a prominent educator recently said, any system of education which neglects training in the humane treatment of animals is failing in its duty.

We have noticed another thing: Any person who is cruel to animals will bear watching in all his other relations of life.

A Century's Progress

From the advent of the railroad until the beginning of practical aerial transportation there elapsed approximately a century. The mighty advances of science and invention which came in between these epochal events were so great as to tax the imagination. Within the span of these hundred years a thousand marvels have been born, which it would take months of research to enumerate and describe. Consider a few jotted down offhand: Railroads, steel ships, perfected cotton gins, the telegraph, the telephone, photography, the phonograph, the sewing machine anaesthetics, sanitation, the X-ray, radium, motion pictures, automobiles, radio, aircraft, television and many others, together with innumerable improvements and refinements which have been added to the original inventions and discoveries.

The advance of the past hundred years appears all the more remarkable when we reflect that mankind has lived and labored under some sort of civilization 10,000 years. The achievements of the last century have been greater than those of all the hundred centuries which preceded it.

These achievements were strikingly portrayed by "A Century of Progress."

The Tipping Racket

While many attempts have been made to eradicate it, even by the passage of laws, the tipping habit persists, through lack of courage on the part of the public to resist it.

Originally, no doubt, the custom of giving tips to servants was inspired by kindly motives, but it has grown to be a nuisance—simply a species of petty graft. Many employers of low class help pay miserably small wages, with the knowledge that tips from customers will supply the deficiency. Employees accept the small wages, or often no wages, with the same understanding. Consequently the public pays in the aggregate vast sums for which no service whatever is rendered.

The effect of the tipping custom is wholly bad, because those who accept the gratuities must lose somewhat in self respect, while those who pay them do so simply because it is expected and they do not wish to appear stingy.

One restaurant recently displayed a sign which read: "We pay our waiters living wages and do not permit them to accept tips." That sign inevitably caused patrons to hold a higher opinion of the proprietor and his waiters.

A School Problem

Earnest educators throughout the United States are giving serious thought to a reform of curricula, with a view to better adapting them to the needs of the present-day student. No current question deserves more thoughtful consideration.

It is no reflection upon our educational leaders that present methods are proving inadequate to the demands of the times. With the ever-increasing store of available knowledge, it becomes more and more difficult to choose that which should be taught in the limited time that can be given to formal education by the average student.

But the problem is not new. As far back as 1758 the prevailing system of education in England came in for drastic criticism by Thomas Sheridan, who labored with little success for its reform.

Sheridan contended that the established system of that day did not fit the young for their duties in life; that it was uniform for all and profitable for none. He also stressed the importance of imparting a better knowledge of the English language.

The latter point, at least, might well be taken to heart today. It would be a great step forward if our children might emerge from high school with a reasonable acquaintance with their mother tongue.

Musical Taste Better

In spite of the preponderance of jazz and other trivial music on the air, Walter Damrosch believes that radio audiences are rapidly forming a taste for symphonic and other high class programs.

He has come to this conclusion from the many thousands of letters he has received from those who have enjoyed his "music appreciation" concerts by a symphony orchestra during the last few years, and the great increase in these expressions of approval which have come to him. He says:

"From the first I was confident the radio would bring about a new era in the history of symphonic music in this country, but I had no idea that the results would become apparent so quickly."

An increasing number of America's finest symphony orchestras, grand opera companies and concert bands have been heard on the air, during the last year, all contributing tremendously to the development of a better appreciation of good music on the part of the general public. We should have even more such programs in the future.

Popular Misnomers

Many familiar articles bear names which are misleading, although the misnomers are generally of little practical importance. A peculiar instance of this is seen in the popular name of the Jerusalem artichoke, which is in no way connected with the famed city of the Holy Land.

In this case the word "Jerusalem" is a corruption of the Italian "girasole," (meaning turning to the sun,) from the habit of the plant, which is of the same genus as the sunflower.

The sunflower, by the way, has a name which is doubly appropriate, because it not only inclines to turn toward the sun, but its flower also has some resemblance to the sun itself. Both the sunflower and Jerusalem artichoke are indigenous to America, but there is also a globe artichoke, which is probably a native of Asia.

Speaking of misnomers, the one most frequently heard is "Irish potato." This valuable tuber was discovered in South America, whence it was introduced into Europe, first as a curiosity. It later became the most important item of food for the Irish people during a time of famine, and the name "Irish" has been applied to it ever since.

The Life Giving Sun

Of all ancient religious rites in which visible objects were venerated the worship of the sun was the most logical, as has been demonstrated by modern science. All life on earth depends upon the beneficent rays of the sun, without which both animals and plants would sicken and die.

In recent years the particular light waves which have a reviving and healing effect upon living organisms have been identified and means have been employed for their practical use. These are called ultra-violet rays and are invisible.

An important discovery was made a few years ago when it was found that ordinary window glass stops the health-giving rays. Then science developed a glass made of fused quartz, thru which these light waves pass freely. Now a type of artificial light which produces the rays has been perfected, whereby the same effects may be obtained whether the sun shines or not.

Ultra-violet rays, either natural or artificial, are used for the prevention and cure of rickets in children and also serve to make adults to a great extent immune from colds and pneumonia, as well as to correct weaknesses which make them susceptible to other diseases.

Thus the life-giving properties of the sun have been made to serve mankind in ways undreamed of by the early sun-worshippers.

Where Things Wear Out

It is remarkable that people ever got along at all before a benevolent Uncle Sam, through the medium of his many departments and bureaus, hit upon the idea of regulating their lives by a wonderful series of advisory bulletins.

A few of these were enumerated by Senator Pat Harrison in a speech ridiculing them in his characteristic style. He mentioned, among others, government bulletins on "Utilization of Calcium in Spinach," "Lamb as You Like It," "Reindeer Recipes," "How to Dress for a Sun Bath," and even "Love Adventures of the American Bullfrog."

Hundreds of other bulletins and pamphlets of about equal absurdity are issued by the Labor, Agriculture and Commerce Departments in Washington, and the cost of preparing and printing them is borne, of course, by the taxpayers who may or may not need this enlightenment.

One other bulletin for the edification of the faithful housewife deserves special mention. It is entitled, "Where Sheets Wear Out." If she reads this she will know without even taking the trouble to look over her bed linens. We await eagerly for a treatise on "Where Pants Wear Out."

And possible in the course of human events the bureaucrats may have material for a more practical dissertation on "Where the Taxpayers' Patience Wears Out."

Prescription

By G. M. SASSAMAN

IT HAD been a strangely busy night at the little corner drug store, and Rex Katon, prescription clerk, was out of sorts. Here it was past ten o'clock and he had arranged a date for nine. With an angry twist he screwed the cap on a bottle and slapped a skull and cross bones label upon it before wrapping it in blue paper.

The negro scrub-woman sloshed past him with her bucket and mop.

He placed the bottle of poison upon the counter beside another blue-clad package. The bewhiskered little scientist who ordered the poison would probably call for it in a few minutes. The other bottle was for a thin-faced little boy whose mother was suffering from stomach cramps.

Katon went into the washroom at the rear of the prescription department. He could clean up a bit while the scrub-woman was busy out there. As he washed his hands he felt a little sorry for having been irritable with the thin-faced little tyke. The kid had almost shown tears when he had said, "Chase yourself around the block while I get this ready." Oh well, he'd give the kid an ice cream cone when he returned for the medicine.

When Katon re-entered the prescription room the woman was almost finished with the floor. She had already wiped off the counter, leaving wet finger-prints upon the clean wrapping paper covering the two bottles.

For the thousandth time Katon made up his mind to complain to the boss when the latter came in to relieve him. That charwoman was altogether too sloppy. Then he grinned to himself as he saw the thin-faced boy opening the street door hesitantly.

"Come in, son," he called, snatching up one of the packages and going forward to the soda counter. Leaning over the counter he handed the boy the bottle. The latter gave him a bill and he returned to him some small change.

The boy turned to leave.

"Wait a minute," said the clerk. Taking up a cone he filled it with a heaping mound of ice cream. The boy's eyes opened wide with pleasure. He took the cone and then looked uncertainly at the change in his other hand.

"Never mind about paying for it," said the clerk kindly. "That's for having to wait."

It was almost fifteen minutes later when the bewhiskered little scientist came in for his order. He had the appearance of one who lived an exact and well-ordered existence.

It didn't surprise Katon when the little man frowned at the wet finger-prints upon the wrapping paper. Nor did it surprise him when the man proceeded to unwrap the bottle and drop the blue paper upon the floor.

He glanced at the clerk and was starting back toward the prescription room when he heard the little man begin to splutter in indignation.

He turned to see the scientist holding the bottle out toward him. The little man's whiskers were fairly bristling with anger.

"This isn't what I ordered, young man," he blazed. "I ordered a special poison preparation, not a bottle of stomach medicine."

As Katon took in the full significance of the words he swayed dizzily, grasping a show-case for support. He felt the blood drain from his face and an awful emptiness take possession of his stomach. His legs seemed, for a fraction of a minute, to have turned to putty.

A ghastly mistake! How had it happened? Oh yes, he remembered now. He had placed the poison on the right-hand side. The scrub-woman must have changed the position of the bottles. He had given the boy a deadly poison instead of medicine. And he didn't even know the youngster's name or address!

Like one in a drunken stupor he leaned against the show-case. He never heard the bewhiskered little man flounce angrily out of the store.

Was it hours that he stood there? Dimly he heard the clock on the wall tick out the seconds. An old lady came into the store and asked querulously for some iodine. He didn't hear her.

When the clerk didn't move at her bidding, the old woman sent a sharp glance in his direction. His drawn, white face and staring eyes frightened her. She made for the door, looking apprehensively over her shoulder as she went out.

Katon pulled himself together at the heavy touch of a hand upon his shoulder. He looked up to see a fat policeman standing before him. The thin-faced little boy, with tears still welling in his eyes, stood beside the officer.

The policeman was talking. His words registered themselves upon Katon's muddled consciousness in scattered, informative fragments. Strangely enough, the officer's tone was not that of angered condemnation. It was almost pleading.

"Kid . . . crying . . . dropped bottle . . . smashed . . . fill another . . ." he was saying.

The truth dawned upon Katon with the slow beauty of a pleasant dream unfolding. He drew himself erect and smiled into the boy's tear-stained face.

"Sure," he breathed, and in the little word he put all the ferocity of a benediction. "Sure. I'll fill out another for you."

Sunday School Teacher—Suppose that another boy should strike your right cheek; what would you do?

Bobbie—Give him the other cheek to strike.

Teacher—That's right.

Bobbie—Yessum, and then if he struck me I'd paralyze him.

The primary grade teacher had been telling the children all about the wind, its power, its effects, etc. On Friday afternoon she thought she would see how much they had remembered about the subject. So she assumed her most enthusiastic manner and said: "Children, as I came to school today in the trolley-car, the door opened and something came in and softly kissed me on the cheek. What do you think it was?"

The children gleefully answered, in one voice: "The conductor."

A Peach of a Time

YOU can have a peach of a time playing with peaches to make delicious dishes for the holiday season. You'll enjoy toying, for instance, with these:

Peach Trifles: Beat one egg till foamy, add one and one-half tablespoons sugar, one tablespoon cream, one and one-half table spoons sherry flavoring (or about half as much real sherry) and from seven-eighths to one cup of flour till stiff enough to roll. Then roll very thin, cut in squares and put a drained piece of sliced canned peach in the center of each. Sprinkle with nutmeg, fold over diagonally, moisten edges slightly and press together. They should now be triangular in shape. Fry in deep fat till a golden brown, and drain on paper.

This Goes Topsy-Turvy

Or, if you want to spend more time making a real big cake, try this:

Peach Topsy-Turvy Cake: Beat two egg yolks, add one cup sugar and cream well. Sift together one cup flour, one-fourth teaspoon salt and one teaspoon baking powder, and add alternately with one-half cup pineapple syrup. Fold in two well-beaten egg whites. Arrange well-drained sliced peaches from a No. 1 can and one-fourth cup chopped dates in bottom of greased cake pan. Pour batter over, and bake for thirty minutes. Turn upside down and serve with whipped cream. This serves eight

Health From Sauerkraut

HERE'S a new one—from Missouri, too, where people are said to be extra suspicious. A Missouri poultryman named Ben A. Peters, wrote the following letter to the Country Gentleman:

"During the past year we made what we believe is an important find in the prevention and control of poultry diseases, especially of baby chicks. Having read what authorities here and abroad had said of sauerkraut as an intestinal disinfectant and germicide in modern medical practice, we thought it worthy of a trial on baby chicks.

"Cabbage, as we know, is rated high in all essential vitamins, and lactic acid is produced in the fermentation of sauerkraut. Buttermilk is recommended for poultry because of its lactic acid, but as far as we can learn no one had tried sauerkraut for his flock.

Splendid Results

"Results of rather extensive tests last spring indicate that sauerkraut is not only a splendid feed for poultry of all ages, but is a preventive, control, and cure of intestinal diseases, being especially helpful for B.W.D. and coccidiosis of baby chicks.

"We cut the kraut in pieces as small as possible, about quarter-inch lengths, for baby chicks. And though we feared there might be trouble in getting them to eat the kraut, they were crazy for this new food.

"We doubt if a better succulent feed than kraut can be found. We believe it can almost entirely replace green feeds, thus ending one of the poultryman's feed troubles as well as solving his disease problem."

What the Country Gentleman's correspondent omitted, in his enthusiasm for baby chicks, is that the consumption of sauerkraut is one of the best health investments for humans as well.

Hectic Days
Sleepless Nights

Miss Currier relieved of nervous days and sleepless nights.

Christine Lanier finds Nerveine best nerve medicine she ever used.

Miss Redman takes Dr. Miles Nerveine whenever she feels restless.

IF YOU are nervous today, you probably will not sleep well tonight. If you don't sleep well tonight, you will probably be nervous tomorrow.

Don't allow yourself to become nervous. Take Dr. Miles Nerveine. It will relax your tense nerves and let you get a good night's sleep.

Irritability, Restlessness, Sleeplessness, often lead to Nervous Headache, Nervous Indigestion, Hysteria—sometimes to a nervous breakdown and organic trouble.

Some of the people, whose letters are printed below, were as nervous as you are—possibly more so—yet they have found relief.

Three years ago I was so nervous I could not bear to go out in company and could not sleep nights. A friend recommended Dr. Miles Nerveine. I now enjoy myself thoroughly and sleep every night. Miss Juliette Currier. New Market, N. H.

I have used Dr. Miles Nerveine in liquid form and find it the best medicine for the nerves I have ever used. Christine Lanier, Middleton, Tennessee

Whenever I have over-indulged and feel restless I take one or two Nerveine Tablets just before I retire. In the morning when I awake I feel like a new person and can go about my work as usual. Dr. Miles Nerveine Tablets quiet your nerves, brace you up and are the simplest, most convenient tablets to take I have ever found. Miss Grace Redman, St. James, Minn.

Before using your Nerveine I was very nervous and irritable. Since I have started to take it I feel so much better that my family notice the difference. I still take it from time to time and the good result is wonderful. J. H. Redding, Rock Island, Ill.

Mr. Redding's family appreciate his improved disposition.

Heart's Desire

By THAYER WALDO

© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service

IT WAS nearly two o'clock this afternoon when we finished the big scene. Was I glad! Standing around for three hours in a mob, wearing a big hot Bohemian peasant costume, isn't exactly fun.

I started to push my way off the set, heading toward the dressing rooms and wondering what lunch I could get for twenty cents that would stop my empty feeling.

As I reached the stairway, a man came elbowing through the crowd and grabbed my arm. He was one of the assistant directors.

"Hold on a minute, girle," he said; "there's somebody over here wants to see you."

I couldn't imagine who it would be, or why, but I followed him. And then, suddenly, my heart gave one big leap. There was Mark Mansfield, the big star of this picture, standing apart from everyone else and smiling right at me--the most wonderful smile! He came forward and made a little bow, saying:

"My dear young lady, all morning I've been watching you and hoping we might meet. Will you give me the pleasure of your company for this afternoon and evening?"

I was so thrilled I felt dizzy, but I just dimpled my cheeks at him and answered:

"Why, how charming, Mr. Mansfield. I'd be delighted."

"Splendid; that makes me very happy," he said, in that glorious rich baritone of his. "Will you join me in half an hour at the west gate? I'll have my car waiting."

"Yes," I told him, still being light and casual, "that will be quite convenient, thanks."

The next thirty minutes I don't seem to remember much about. I must have been in a sort of dream or something, I guess. Getting an invitation like this from the one man I'd always wanted to know and never even seen from closer than across a sound stage, was so marvelous. Of course, I've been sure for a long time, that sooner or later some one would notice me, but I never thought it would be Mark--I mean Mr. Mansfield.

When I came out of the dressing rooms, I could see his tall broad-shouldered figure by the gate across the lot. I walked toward him, but not with too much hurry; that would have made it look as if his waiting for me upset my poise. As I came up he gave me his arm and said:

"My dear, you look even lovelier now than in that costume, if I may say so."

"Thank you," I replied, tucking one hand under the soft flannel that covered his strong arm. "You compliment adorably."

We stepped out onto the sidewalk. By the curb just ahead was his big dark blue Duesenberg limousine. A man who wore a uniform of the same shade stood by the back door, holding it open. I remembered having seen him lots of times, driving Mark--Mr. Mansfield--around, sometimes alone, sometimes with various lady stars.

Then on the opposite side of the street I saw another car--a tan Rolls-Royce with black trimming. I knew that belonged to Grace Monroe, and she was the actress who went most with the man I was with now. She'd just got in and was staring across toward us. I tried to make my smile friendly and not too triumphant as I let Mark help me into his car.

When we were settled in the deep cushions, he reached for my hand and held it very gently.

"I thought," he said, "that it might be pleasant to take a short drive somewhere, then go to the Biltmore for dinner, and perhaps dance later at the Coconut Grove. Does that seem an attractive plan?"

I murmured, "Perfectly!" with just the proper touch of carelessness. We were stopped for the traffic signal by the studio's north end. I glanced out to see a bunch of the girls who had worked in the mob scene with me, standing on the corner waiting for a bus. I waved and, oh! how they gaped!

Pretty soon we were going up a winding road into the North Hollywood hills. Mark slipped his arm around me and I nestled close to him.

"Sweet little lady," he said, talking in a kind of soft dreamy voice, "you have no business slaying your youth away at an extra's job. Wouldn't you like to throw it all over--to travel, to see the far, mysterious places of the world, and to have romance? Those are the things I really long for. You know, my life is a lonely and dreary one, too. Don't you think it would be splendid if we could find such happiness and adventure together?"

I don't remember exactly what I answered. We'd come to the top of Crescenta Heights and there at our right lay Hollywood, looking like a fairyland as it stretched off into the mist that hung where the ocean was. Dear Mark bent down and laid his cheek against mine.

"Darling," he said, waving one hand toward the city below, "this is as near as you and I should ever be to that and all it stands for. Now that we've found each other--"

Oh, dear diary, I just can't go on! It's so terribly foolish and I guess what people would call pitiful for me to be sitting up here all by myself on Crescenta Heights, writing such a lot of wild stuff out of my imagination. Why, all the times I've played extra in Mark Mansfield's pictures, he never even looked at me--or anyone else except that beautiful, hateful wife of his!

Winter Days

GOOD hot dishes for winter days when you use up calories fast resisting the cold can be made with combinations of eggs and corn. These dishes not only supply you with plenty of calories, but they make you chuckle with a sense of inward well-being as you recollect their delicious taste. Try these succulent recipes that are simple to make:

Savory Corn: To two cups canned corn add two well-beaten eggs, two tablespoons chopped green pepper or pimiento, two tablespoons melted butter, three-fourths cup milk and salt and pepper to taste. Pour into a buttered baking dish and cover top with buttered crumbs mixed with an equal amount of grated cheese. Bake in a moderate oven until set and browned on top. Serves eight.

This Hits the Spot

Corn Cakes: Beat two eggs well, and add one-half cup sour milk, one-fourth teaspoon soda and one cup canned corn. Sift together one cup flour, one-half teaspoon salt and two teaspoons baking powder, and add. Add one tablespoon melted butter, and fry in small cakes on a hot griddle. Serve with pork sausage and gravy or with maple syrup.

Plans for My Poultry Project

This project will consist of four-hundred baby chicks which will be purchased in February or early March.

The first step in this project is to get the lot in which the brooder house is placed sowed down in oats. This will make it possible for the chicks to have some green feed material early in the spring.

Before the chicks are secured the brooder house will be cleaned and disinfected, therefore the house will be exempt of worm eggs, parasites and all other unhealthy factors.

Four-hundred baby chicks will be purchased in the latter part of February or early March. The reason for getting these chicks at this time will enable me to get the roosters on the market by May 15, at which time the price is from two to five cents higher than a few weeks later. Also the pullets will be laying in October and November, at which time the price of eggs are at their highest price.

A well balanced ration of home mixed feeds will be fed to the chicks. This ration will vary as the chicks grow older. A well balanced ration is essential to the fast developing roosters, and to keep the pullets growing so that they will be well matured by September fifteenth. It will be at this time that I will cull the flock. The immature and sick looking pullets will be sold.

After the culling has taken place, the pullets will be moved into the chicken house and should be laying in October.

I shall keep accurate records on this project so that in the end I can tell how much profit or loss I have made and whether the project has benefited me.
