Lloyd Sings in Chinese In "The Cat's Paw"

Harold Lloyd goes in for singing in his latest comedy "The Cat's Paw," produced from the Saturday Evening Post novel by Clarence Budington Kelland. Not in a big way, however, but for singing nonetheless. His singing voice is recorded, along with a quartet of his Chinese friends, with whom he seeks solace and relaxation, when the rigors of an American city get too tiring for him. Lloyd in "The Cat's Paw," which comes to the Broadlands Theatre, on Friday and Saturday nights, Feb. 22-23, portrays a young man, who has spent virtually all his life in China by the side of his father, an American missionary, who has devoted his whole career to bringing happiness to the residents of an interior village. When he comes to America, he seeks out the Chinese friends of his father's mission associates, and through their wives, and aid as well as his own native philosophy, overcomes situations that are good for row on row of laughs, as well as dramatic thrills.

Lloyd had the herculean task of learning to speak two Chinese dialects before starting "The Cat's Paw." A strikingly novel use is made of Chinese dialects in the picture, and in order to comply with the wishes of the Chinese government's representative in Hollywood, Lloyd speaks both the Mandarin and Cantonese dialects.

However, don't let this delude you into believing you will not know what Lloyd is talking about in these scenes, for the pantomime gets across the meaning of everything Lloyd says in Chinese.

An Augury of Better Times

Reports from mining regions chronicle the development of a large number of new properties, as well as the reopening of old mines.

The gold "boom" is largely responsible for this activity, but other metals share in the improvement. Silver, copper and lead seem bound for better times after long, lean years in which there was little demand, and prices remained at bottom levels. Now the sound of drills and the whir of heavy machinery again resounds in places that, until a short time ago, were desolate and deserted.

Stimulated mining activity will be felt throughout the whole country—all mining creates new wealth, as well as jobs and opportunities and investments. The evidence of an improved mining future is one of the best recovery indicators.

36,000 Automobile Murders

The president of the United States, in letters to the Governors of the 48 states, has urged the enactment of uniform regulation of traffic, and intensified safety educational campaigns.

There is no good argument against uniform traffic legislation and regulation in the face of the fact that the killing record of automobiles last year touched the 36,000 mark.

Think of it! Thirty-six-thousand lives snuffed out by automobiles in one year. Why should there be any argument about uniform traffic laws and the need of cooperation between states to eliminate such a disgraceful record as this?

Take a specific example: Why should one city be allowed, as at present, to maintain three different types of stop signals at intersections, thus confusing both its own drivers and those from other states? Legislators could work on a life saving program such as this to the benefit of every man, woman and child in the country.

A Famous Flag

One of the South's most famous battle flags is now in the Confederate museum in Richmond, to which it was presented by the family of the late Colonel Charles T. Loehr, historian of the First Virginia regiment, to which the flag belonged.

The women of Richmond made the flag out of strips of silk cut from their dresses, and it had its baptism of fire at Bull Run. It led the First Virginia in many battles, and saw its last service on the field at Gettysburg, where the regiment formed a part of Pickett's division in its ill-fated charge, one of the most desperate in military history, whose failure lost the battle and perhaps the war.

Of the regiment's plight at the close of the battle Colonel Loehr wrote: "The color guard is dead and the color sergeant has lost his arm; our colonel lies dying on the field, and about 160 who went into the charge."

It is fitting that the famous flag should be added to other priceless relics in the Confederate museum, which are viewed with reverence by many thousands of visitors from North and South alike.

New Easter Date

Many times it has been proposed to establish a more nearly uniform date for Easter Sunday, but tradition and custom are hard to overcome, so the old method of calculation, established by the Council of Nice more than 1,600 years ago still prevails.

Under this system Easter may fall as early as March 22 or as late as April 25, and all movable feasts of the church are governed by the date of Easter.

The British House of Commons once passed a bill proposing that the legal date of Easter be the first Sunday after the second Saturday in April. It was not intended that the British should try to put this proposal into effect alone, but the idea was to call a world conference to consider joint action of the nations on the subject.

There are many reasons, business and social, to commend the new plan, but inasmuch as such an innovation would clash with long established religious custom it is doubtful that it will be able to command support in ecclesiastical circles. Without such support it could not be given practical effect.

Washington's Critics

As we in 1935 celebrate the 203rd birthday of George Washington, mindful of his inestimable services to the great Republic of which he is truly called the father, it seems almost incredible that he should have been subjected during his lifetime to the most bitter and violent attacks by military and civil opponents.

Yet such was the case. Perhaps no worthy man in the history of our country was ever so viciously assailed as was Washington, both during the Revolutionary War and throughout his subsequent career as President.

The famous and infamous "Conway cabal," composed of disgruntled officers of the Continental Army, sought to have Washington removed from his position of commander-in-chief in favor of General Gates. The plan failed, but the intrigue of his enemies made Washington's difficult task much harder at a critical time of the war.

Even when he had finished his public life, after serving eight years as President, in fact, upon the very day of his leaving that high office, an editorial appeared in a Philadelphia newspaper containing the following:

"This ought to be a day of jubilee in the United States. If ever a nation was debauched by a man, the American nation has been debauched by Washington. Let his conduct be an example to future ages; let the history of Federal government instruct mankind that the mask of patriotism may be worn to conceal the foulest designs against the liberties of the people."

Washington's conduct has been indeed "an example to future ages," but not the horrible example which the Philadelphia scribbler had in mind. In spite of all criticism and abuse, the name and fame of George Washington have come down to us as an imperishable national heritage.

He was human—he was not a saint—but what he accomplished so far outweighs any minor shortcomings that his grateful countrymen have written his faults upon the sand and his virtues upon their hearts.

What's In a Name?

SCOTT MORGAN stared at the telegram before him. It was from his assistant, Tom Haddon, dated Washington:

MARRIED THIS MORNING STOP SWELL IDEA STOP WHY DON'T YOU TRY IT STOP NOT INTERFERING WITH MY ASSIGNMENT.

So that was why Haddon had been so anxious for the Washington assignment. He remembered vaguely Tom's girl lived in Washington. There had been a misunderstanding; Tom had gone around scowling for days and smoking countless cigarettes.

Well, thank heavens, that Sylvia Ralston affair had taught him his lesson! His first year in New York, too. He had been mad about her; worshipped her. And all she wanted was his influence as a reporter. Well, he had come through for her. Rotogravures; newspaper and magazine articles glorified her. She got her big break . . . and coldly discarded him. Funny he should be thinking about her now. But how could he help it? Today's papers had chronicled her third marriage. Her pictures showed her even more glorified than ever.

At least Tom's girl was sincere; she had complained because Tom had taken out another girl when he was engaged to her. It must be wonderful, Scott thought, for a girl to hold an engagement so sacred.

Mary Sanders came back from lunch and hung her hat on the rack just outside his door. He gave her a curt nod; it was almost rude, she thought. She went into her own cubby-hole of an office next to his, banging the door after her.

"All settled," Scott heard her say. "I'm changing my name."

Leslie Miller stopped her typewriting. "But you weren't at all sure you'd do it this morning!"

"I know, but Doctor Urbanc convinced me at lunch time."

"You seem pretty unenthusiastic," Leslie observed, "for a girl about to change her name and with it the whole destiny of her life. Don't you like the new name, Mary?"

"No! There was utter distaste in her voice."

"Then, dear, why do it?"

"Oh, the doctor convinced me that for material and financial reasons—for social success and—"

"So!" Scott Morgan observed. "So!"

Even Mary Sanders would barter her soul for material and financial reasons. Who could a fellow depend on!

He remembered how often he had had to fight off a tenderness for Mary.

Leslie Miller was saying: "But I wouldn't, Mary, dear, not unless I was entirely satisfied. Hold on to your own name and wait till something better comes along. You'll get a bright idea one of these days."

"What do you mean wait till I get a bright idea?" Mary almost cried.

"That's all I ever get. Doctor Urbanc says so, too! But what do I get out of it? Not even a raise! Here I plan the whole campaign that gets the new cigarette account from every agency in town—me, a mere girl! And who gets the plums from my bright ideas? Tom Haddon is sent down to Washington to do the publicity stunt that I planned. He gets a raise, too. Scott Morgan brings in the whole lay-out to the president and probably grabs all the credit. I suppose he gets a good bonus, too. While I—I—You just bet I'll change my name!"

"Mary! Why I thought you liked Scott Morgan!"

At that moment Scott Morgan entered. He was flushing furiously. His red hair seemed even redder.

"I had no intention of eavesdropping, Miss Sanders." His voice was like cold steel. "But I assure you I received no bonus on your brilliant ideas. If you had been content to wait until tomorrow, the end of the month, you would have seen I recommended you for a sizable increase in salary. As for a girl changing her name for financial reasons . . . social success . . ."

"It is no concern of yours why I change my name!"

"It is my affair when you say you're changing your name because I got a bonus on your bright ideas . . ."

"You're insufferable! I loathe you! I've always loathed you!" But tears were in her eyes; her hands trembled.

"And I do not exactly admire you, myself, Miss Sanders." Now his voice was a white heat. "I trust your doctor has all the virtues I lack—every advantage that—"

Leslie Miller laughed hysterically.

"Mary's not getting married! She's just changing her name numerologically to get new vibrations. Doctor Urbanc is a wonderful numerologist. Why, did you know that Mark Twain never had any luck under his own name of Samuel Clemens? All the movie stars—"

"Not getting married?" Scott Morgan gasped.

"Hardly," Mary announced grimly.

"Oh, no," Leslie went on. "There's not even a marriage vibration in her name! Nothing but kindness that's not appreciated, virtue that goes unrewarded, brilliant ideas that—"

"Leslie!" Mary's face was flushed. "I'm not exactly tongue-tied, and I didn't give you my confidence to broadcast to the whole office force!"

"I'm not the whole office force," said Scott Morgan with commanding authority. "I'm merely a man so in love with you that he almost went crazy when he thought you were going to marry some one else."

Leslie Miller discreetly withdrew.

One Swell Vacation
By G. W. VON BERNUTH
©. McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

SAY, I sure was glad to see those four people again! I'll say! Ten years since I'd spent my vacation at Maple View—you know, a feller that's unmarried likes to go different places an' see the world. On the train I'd begun to wonder if I'd have to spend a couple a days gettin' acquainted. So when I sees them four sittin' there on the porch, just like it was ten years back, I don't contain myself.

"Well, for cryin' out loud!" I hollers.

"Well, for cryin' out loud!" yells Al, suddenly tumblin' to who I was. "If it ain't old Herbie back here again!"

"Say, whadda y' know!" says Maybelle. She's Al's wife.

An' Fred an' Myrtle, they was just as surprised as the other two, an' boy! did they give me the glad hand! Maybelle, she's one a them impulsive girls (but no harm in her, y'understand) she up an' threw her arms right around my neck an' kissed me. Say, it was grand.

Just as Maybelle was takin' her arms from around my neck I suddenly remembered that Al usta be awful jealous of Maybelle. But say, he never bats an eyelash. If anything it was Fred that was lookin' sour, an' that struck me funny, too, for all Myrtle done (she's pretty reserved, Myrtle) was shake hands with me. I put it all down to imagination. An' sure enough, I musta been right, because just then, when I happened to notice a sweet-lookin' little Jane an' says (you know, the way you do) "some baby!" Fred laffed an' dragged me up to her an' says "Miss Geary, meet Mr. Herbert Dill, Herbie fr short."

"Pleased to meet you, I'm sure, Herbie," says Miss Geary. Say, she was a cute little trick. "You an' me's goin' to get better acquainted before my vacation's over, baby."

Well, ev'rybody laffed, an' I c'd see how we was goin' to be a pretty congenial bunch, especially when Al says: "Say, whadda matter with us all goin' over to Laurel Grove tonight?"

"O. K. with me, if Blue Eyes here will come along," says I, not forgettin' my manners.

Well, Blue Eyes says she would, so about eight o'clock Al brings his roadster around, an' we all pile into it. Al, he was drivin', an' he says: "Who's comin' in front with me?" Maybelle pipes up an' says, "I am." Well ev'rybody laffed at that, but in she gets, an' then Al says: "Fred, just to square things, you got to sit in the rumble."

So of course, that only leaves me to get in with Al an' Maybelle, with Fred in the rumble, sittin' between Myrtle an' Miss Geary.

"Say, this is like old times," I says.

To make room for Al's driving, Maybelle moves closer to me. So then to make more room I put my arm along the back of the seat behind her, thinkin' as I did it, that it wasn't so much like old times, because in them days Al woulda seen me dead before he'd a let me sit that close to Maybelle.

Well, when we got outta the car at Laurel Grove, Fred, he was lookin' sour again, an' when Maybelle grabbed my arm an' started steerin' me toward the dance hall, he says to me, "I thought you ast Miss Geary to come with you tonight." He said it kinda nasty-like, an' I started to come back at him but I didn't want to start nothin' so I says:

"Where's my blue-eyed baby?"

"Right where you left her," says she, kinda sassy.

Well, we went in the dance hall an' danced a coupla dances, an' then we strolled over to the outdoor cabaret. We set down at one of the tables. Maybelle was next to me, an' after a while she begins makin' passes at me. I say that wouldn't do, so while the others was standin' up watchin' the cabaret show, I grabbed her by the wrist an' says: "You come with me, girlie." We went down by the lake an' I hired a canoe, but we hadn't any more'n got pushed off from shore than I heard a hollerin', an' there was the others. Fred was in th' lead, an' he didn't stop for water or nothin', he come right out to where we was.

"Hey, how do you get that way—takin' Maybelle out in a canoe?" he yells, an' I see he was mad clean through.

"What's that t' you?" says I, gettin' mad myself. "If Al don't mind, you should worry. Maybelle's his wife, not yours." An' with that I give Fred a push with the paddle, an' he sits right down in th' water.

Well, you never heard such a yell as that feller Al let out. He laffed an' laffed an' laffed. I thought he was laffin' because Fred looked so funny settin' there in the water, but then I heard him gaspin', "Oh, boy! Oh, boy! Maybelle! My wife!"

"Well, ain't she?" says I.

"Oh, boy!" says he, laffin' some more.

"Oh, boy! you need to get hep all right! Why, Maybelle ain't been my wife fr five years. I'm married to Myrtle now, an' Maybelle's Fred's wife."

Say, I never heard the end of it. Oh, sure, we made it up all right. When Fred realized that I'd thought Maybelle was still Al's wife, he understood everything. Fact is, he apologized to me as much as I apologized to him. Fred's a perfect gentleman. Oh, yes, I had a fine vacation. Nothin' like a congenial bunch to make you have a good vacation. But after that night I stuck to my own girl pretty well. In fact, here she comes now. Mr. Smith, meet my wife, Mrs. Dill, Miss Geary that was."

Bertie Goes to the Circus
By CHET GRANT
©. McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

THE Iron Horse, plugging and chugging, achieved the crown of the last steep hill, the one that overlooks Foxboro, and came to a momentary halt. George Blake nodded down to his right and barked savagely, "There's your doggone circus!" Little Bertie, aged six, repressed a shriek of delight and merely grinned. Bertie was psychic. He realized that his cousin George was in no mood for overtures of any kind.

Life was indeed a burned doughnut to George, guiding the Iron Horse down to the circus grounds. Another perfect holiday spoiled; another positive proof that his parents were in league against his happiness; forcing him to take little Bertie to the circus when his whole being yearned to be with one Mabel Porter. His mother's parting shots still rang in his ears. "Don't you dare let anything happen to little Bertie! Don't you dare overload his stomach! Don't you let go of his hand!" Cripes! You'd think the troublesome little hellion was made of solid gold!

"C'mon," George growled, climbing out of the parked Iron Horse. "And no monkey business, feller," he warned. "You stick close to me. If I lose you I'll leave you here for the circus folks. They'll feed you to the tigers."

Who can resist a circus? Even George, after an hour in the Big Top, had to admit that he was enjoying himself. But it was at the pink lemonade stand that the world took on its rosiest hue. The lemonade was served by a girl in a crisp gingham dress. She had lots of blond hair and saucer blue eyes. George drank three glasses as slowly as possible, but the girl never so much as smiled at him. And right at that moment Bertie disappeared into thin air!

The three glasses of pink lemonade became a ball of ice in George's stomach. He gazed frantically around and suddenly saw Bertie's suit squeezing through the crowds. With a yelp of rage George set off in pursuit. Coming up behind his unsuspecting victim he scooped him into his arms.

"For two cents I'd belt you one," George rapped out. "What's the idea of running away when . . ."

"You belt me, brother," a deep bass voice rumbled in the squirming burden George held, "and I'll sock you one myself!" George dropped the midget as if he were a hot coal, and was relieved when that diminutive gentleman stalked off.

Wiping the perspiration from his brow George went into the throng again. He passed through and skirted the crowds before the side shows. He looked behind booths and under gaming tables. He stood still and yelled, "Bertie!" until people stared.

Just when he was ready to look for a policeman by some coincidence, he found himself at the pink lemonade stand again.

Wonder of wonders, the blond girl smiled at him! "I'm glad you came back," she greeted him. "Your little cousin has been helping me. He crawled under the table, you know." She handed George a tall glass of the rosy liquid. "Here, cool off."

Well, she was stunning to George, so he grinned amiably at Bertie who was stacking empty bottles behind the counter. All was right with the world. George ordered another glass of the cooling beverage. It was like nectar coming from her hands. He wanted to tell her something of the sort, but lost his nerve. Instead he asked for another glass, and another . . .

"You must like that stuff," she observed, frowning.

"It's swell," George enthused. "Like you," he dared to say.

"That's no compliment," she smiled.

"Well, anyhow," George grinned, "a couple of glasses won't hurt me. I . . . uk! . . . scuse me."

"A couple! You've had ten." The girl led Bertie outside the stand. "You'd better get your big cousin started for home," she advised.

Mrs. Blake was wiping the supper dishes when the telephone rang. Its summons startled her and she picked up the instrument with misgiving.

"Hello. Hello, Aunt Frances. This is Bertie."

"Bertie! Why, my dear child, what . . ."

"I'm standin' on a soap box, Aunt Frances. I wanted to call you up."

"Darling, how cute!"

"Yes'm."

"You're all right, Bertie?" Mrs. Blake asked suddenly.

"Oh, yes'm, I'm all right. But, Aunt Frances . . ."

"Yes, dear."

"Aunt Frances, I think you 'n' Uncle Charlie'd better come down here to Foxboro and bring us home."

"Bring you home?"

"Yes'm. You see, Aunt Frances, George, he's awful sick."

"Bertie! What's the matter with George?" Mrs. Blake trembled.

"Oh, George's all right, Aunt Frances, only his stummick ain't."

"What's the matter with his stomach?"

"Well, I guess, Aunt Frances, George had too much lemonade 'n' . . ."

There was a resounding crash as Bertie fell off the soap box. Mrs. Blake ran to the back of the house and called her husband. In a moment the family car rolled out of the garage and much as we would like to follow them, perhaps it is best if we draw the curtain now on George's ignominious homecoming.
