Art Zane Writes Letter From Colton, California

Ye ed received the following letter which is self-explanatory:
Colton, California,
June 6, 1935.

Dear Friend Joe:—It is seldom I feel the urge to write, so before the spell is broken I will drop you a few lines.

About the only time the relatives hear from me is through the columns of the Broadlands News.

The family are all O. K. and well. The children are all living here in Colton except the oldest daughter who lives in East Chicago, Ind. She visited here about seven weeks during March and April, but her husband became ill and she had to return home before her visit was completed. She talks of returning in September, bringing her husband along to complete her visit. Perhaps she did not see enough of the Chicago World's Fair and is coming to the San Diego Exposition to see the balance of it. I understand they moved most of it down there and added to it. San Diego has a wonderful Zoo, I understand it is second to New York, only the wild-like setting makes it more interesting. They say it takes at least three days to see the Zoo. Don't allow me to discourage any of you coming to see the fair, but some statistician has compiled the figures of $196,000 if you should see every attraction. Some one said the Ford exhibit was about the only free thing there, but a trip out here even without seeing the fair would well repay you. The fair lasts until November.

Now a few words about the economic situation. California was the first to start a real Federal Works program, and San Bernardino County, in which we live, was really the first county. It being the largest county in the U. S. A. and rather thinly populated, speaks very well for it. Our county pioneered in production for use, which includes factories for clothing, mattresses, shoe repairing, community gardens, and wood cutting. We have recreation facilities of all kinds placed in the parks by this program. Games of all kinds and people paid to teach you how to play them, music of all kinds, musicians paid under this set-up, free dances in public buildings, music free, actors put on free plays, all being paid by SERA.

I hope what I've said doesn't start a lot of poor folks out here, as there is a bill before the California senate, already passed the assembly, to curb paupers entering California, as this state seems to be a haven especially in winter months. Besides, you have to be a resident of the state for at least twelve months before you are eligible for work relief.

Well Joe I had better ring off. Give my regards to all Broadlands folks.

Arthur C. Zane.

Mrs. Florence Cannon Dies In Oklahoma

Mrs. Florence Boyd Cannon, of Longview, passed peacefully away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Russell Slater, Three Sands, Okla., May 30, 1935, at 5:40 a. m.

Florence Boyd was born at Green Castle, Ind., Dec. 3, 1853, and was married to Michael Cannon of Sidney, Ill., in 1874. The family moved to Middleton, Oklahoma, in 1906, shortly after which Mrs. Cannon united with the Presbyterian Church. Later, in 1923, after returning to Illinois, she completed her obedience to the gospel and was received as a member of the Longview Christian church during revival services conducted by Ministers R. T. Hickerson and Fred Gresham.

Mrs. Cannon was the mother of nine children, seven of whom preceded her in death. Surviving are two daughters, Mrs. Russell Slater, of Oklahoma, and Mrs. Bertha Shride, of Villa Grove, Ill.; two grandchildren, Mrs. Thomas Fitzgerald, Chicago, and Florence Thurman, Villa Grove; also one great-granddaughter, Paula Joan Fitzgerald. There are also many friends who mourn the passing of a gracious, friendly neighbor.

This was the first game of the season on the local diamond and was very interesting from the start to the finish, the locals being in the lead by a margin of several runs until the last few innings of the battle.

Owing to an error made by the local score keeper, it was at first thought the Danville team won by a 7 to 6 score, but this later proved to be a mistake.

Wiese and Hooe formed the battery for Broadlands. Wiese struck out 11 batters, while the Danville pitcher struck out 2.

Shirley Temple in "Bright Eyes"

One of the finest, most human, most heart-warming films in a decade, will be shown at Broadlands this Saturday night.

The picture so heartily endorsed is "Bright Eyes," Fox Film's best vehicle for the amazing talents of Shirley Temple, child star extraordinary. No such sensational performance as Shirley's, no such dramatic and persuasive film story has been seen on the local screen in recent months. There can be no doubt whatever of the tremendous reception which will be accorded this delightful drama wherever it is shown.

"Bright Eyes" has universal appeal, in every sense of the word. Swift, human, at times pathetic, at times enormously funny, it is a story which will hold you in its spell from opening sequence to smashing finish.

Frightening Ads

Clever advertising of antiseptics and other preparations reputed to save us from all the ills to which the flesh is heir has done a lot of harm, according to Dr. Shaw, professor of philosophy at the New York University.

While real science is relieving the human mind of many former bugaboos, modern "fear factories" are manufacturing new horrors to alarm the gullible and shorten their lives through sheer fright. Just as we have been reassured by the scientific control of yellow fever, small-pox, malaria and a host of old time dangers, along comes the kill-joy tribe, warning us of the menace of dandruff, pyorrhea and halitosis. Quoting the good doctor:

"Man is tormented by an array of drug-filled remedies which are supposed to act as antiseptics. The bath-room becomes a clinic, and every man a doctor in spite of himself. Now, dread in the heart is worse than dandruff in the hair, and fear in the soul is more unsightly than film on the teeth."

Unheeded Warnings

It is one of the most amazing facts connected with modern life that the number of deaths resulting from carelessness makes no greater impression upon the general public.

In spite of the daily record of accidents, drivers continue to take a chance, with an inevitable percentage of fatal results. The same is true of other practices which take their grim toll of human life.

Persons who are ordinarily careful in protecting their property or their health appear to throw discretion to the winds the moment they grasp the wheel of an automobile, and positively invite disaster through failing to observe the most elementary cautions.

The jaywalker is equally reckless, taking the chance of being run down for the sake of saving a few steps or a moment's time. Those who are careless of other dangers help to swell the harvest of deaths.

And the most lamentable fact is that no amount of warning appears to have any appreciable effect.

The Earth's Shape

If asked who first conceived the idea that the world is round, many persons would instantly think of Columbus, as it was through his belief in the spherical shape of the earth that he undertook the voyage which led to the discovery of America.

But the true figure of the earth was known centuries before the birth of Christ, although it appears that the spherical theory never gained wide acceptance among the ancients.

Eratosthenes, a Greek geometer and astronomer who flourished in the second century before Christ, is credited with being the first to discover the correct principles whereby the figure of the earth might be determined. Although his results were not accurate, his method was the same as that followed at the present day.

Centuries before Eratosthenes astronomers regarded the earth as a sphere, but generally considered it as the center of the universe. It is said that Pythagoras, born in 582 B. C., was the first to declare that the earth revolved around the sun, but he only taught this secretly to a few chosen disciples.

Many people today do not believe that the world is round. Among these may be mentioned Wilbur Voliva and his community at Zion, Ill., although Rev. Voliva is a college graduate and uses all modern scientific appliances, and is an ardent radio "fan."

Headline English

Professors of English held a convention and among other things discussed the influence of newspapers in modifying the speech of the people. As might have been expected, some felt that this influence was good, while others thought it terrible.

In their search for short words which will fit in the limited space available to them, writers of newspaper headlines have developed a peculiarly effective, though sometimes inelegant form of expression.

In the headlines, an investigation, of which there are many, is called a probe, because five letters are easier to handle than 13. Similarly a collision is a crash, an agreement is a pact, to denounce is to flay, an explosion is a blast, an athletic contest is a tilt, and so on. On the sport page "journalise" does its worst.

Deploping what he considers the evil effects of newspaper English, Dr. Hopkins of the University of Kansas said that teachers were duty-bound to take a stand against it, but significantly added: "In theory that is our stand, but it does us little good to take any stand. We might as well let the language go its way. It will anyway."

And that probably covers all there is to be said on the subject.

What is Evidence

Every once in a while something occurs to upset our ideas concerning the kind of evidence that is worthy of credence. Such an occurrence is seen in the case of Conda Dabney, once convicted in Kentucky and given life imprisonment for the murder of a young woman.

At the trial another woman swore that she was an eye-witness to the crime, and a considerable array of circumstantial evidence was presented to corroborate her testimony. At the time of Dabney's conviction practically everyone felt that the verdict was just.

Yet, a few weeks later, the woman who was supposed to have been murdered showed up, alive and well. Dabney was released, but think of what he and his family suffered through the diabolical attempt to swear his life away.

All this illustrates how unreliable the most convincing evidence may be, and while it is doubtless true that for every innocent person punished a dozen guilty ones escape, it shows that a great responsibility rests upon a jury, particularly when a human life is at stake.

Extremes In Nature

An interesting list of the extremes in natural substances was recently compiled by Professor Hopkins of the University of Illinois, in which the following were named:

Radium is the most expensive, being worth about 100,000 times its weight in gold.

Platinum is the heaviest of well known metals, being 21 times as heavy as water, but the rare metals osmium and iridium are slightly heavier.

Hydrogen gas is the lightest ordinary substance, having only about one-fourteenth the weight of air, but a temporary gas produced in certain vacuum tubes is somewhat lighter.

Diamonds are the hardest substance known, but carborundum is almost as hard.

Electric furnaces produce the greatest heat known on earth, running up to nearly 7,000 degrees Fahrenheit, while the extreme in cold is solid helium and other gases which solidify at about 458 degrees below zero. These extremes of heat and cold are not natural, but are produced by artificial means.

WNU Service.

IT WAS the glamorous night of their rediscovery. They had been interrupted in the garden and so were dancing again, two people who invited adoring eyes for their youth and meanness for each other.

He was vowing that this time it must not be too beautiful to last with this woman who had been his wife.

He found himself mistaken in the thought that he had remembered how vivid, how utterly desirable she could be. Her gown, shimmering in the old mysterious way, reminded him of his loneliness the last empty year for just the intimacies of her belongings.

There was still that look of intercepted flight in her eyes. No one, nothing, had taken that away. It was so peculiarly hers he wanted it to stay forever.

At this instant, in a way that had once been most marked between them, their thoughts met contrariwise.

"This time you must clip my wings," she said with veiled rapture.

He hesitated. It was still difficult to touch the past lightly.

"You said they were powerless before." He spoke as if it were something he must now have only dreamed.

"I go over and over the things I said. How can you still care?"

"How could I not care? You are unconquerable in my heart." He appeared to be viewing mentally something lovely and quite apart from them both.

He was recalled by the bafflement in her eyes and remembered instantly how she used to say she never really knew what was back of his eyes when he looked away like that. Again there was her old demand in the glance she gave him, saying so plainly that she must know. It had the old effect of producing helpless silence on his part. This would not do.

He looked down at her in tender, anxious concern.

"Out in the garden you said . . ." she hesitated as if savoring something he might, under pressure, repeat.

There was a slight groping silence on his part.

"Say it again," she pleaded. This was very great condescension from her. His very amazement made him powerless now to break a silence so seemingly imposed by some cautious angel.

"Oh now I know," she said, a gentleness breaking over the rebellion in her eyes as she looked up into his. "You always told in little continual ways. The big moments were very rare. Very waited for."

"Always wait, Tawny Lily," he begged, his voice rough with rushing tenderness. "So much can only be lived and looked."

People were watching them intently. It was the first time they had met since they parted. He saw that she was swiftly, cleverly, appraising what she read in eyes everywhere as they moved effortlessly through the crowds. Finally she said, "They think they are seeing an attempt to play with you again."

"All the world may stare—" he quoted with contagious sufficiency.

The misted meaning in her eyes made him forget to go on. Instantly, thrillingly, she took him off guard by continuing what he supposed she would have forgotten.

"You and I are bound together so!"

There was suddenly a look of appalled surrender in her eyes before incredibly, her precious, proud head bowed swiftly on his shoulder. He was unprepared for the tears crowding under her lashes, as he guarded this, his great moment of pride, and hers of such complete surrender, by guiding her towards the garden again.

Secure in the dimness blurred with white cherry blossoms, she said:

"I'll never do that again. I've shocked even myself. Now there will be nothing piquant about me for you ever any more."

"It's wonderful to have you say things you don't mean when you shouldn't mean them," he told her gravely.

"I had to tell you."

"And I had to know!" He was thinking that she had always really been for him. She confirmed this with her next words.

"Now I have clipped my own wings, and gladly, for you. Always I've been a little afraid of the restlessness in them anyway."

He drew a branch of white blossoms down around her shoulders and then startled with the effect, looked at her intently.

"There will always be a bough waiting for the sweetest wild wings in the world. Only remember your way home, my dear!"

"And you would star it with flowers for me! I can see that in your eyes. Even after saying I was already too tired and frail to be windblown or streamlined. That I should be yours."

With one hand he held the blossoms closer about them and with the other drew a sprig across her eyes for a moment to veil the sweetness there while he made a secret petition that it might always stay.

"There was one white petal fell on your hair as you kissed me. It is still there," she told him with a queer little sort of reverence.

"They would all fall on you if you were to kiss me—again," he promised. "Red hair needs exquisite care. Let's prolong the process by letting the years make it white."

"In just such a way?"

"In just such a way!"

Interlude

WNU Service.

EDDIE saw them when he turned the corner and quick anger bubbled inside of him.

Betty was leaning back against a lamp post, her slim hands behind her. Leaning over her, braced with one hand against the post was Sid Wise, his street-gamin face white and pasty in the light.

Betty was the first to notice Eddie's angry approach. She ducked beneath Sid's braced arm. "Hello, Eddie," she said doubtfully.

Sid Wise came around more slowly. "Lo, Ed," he offered.

Eddie went up to him. His finger jabbed Sid beneath the collar bone. "Scram!"

The word came out harshly and Sid went back on his heels a trifle from the prodding. "What's a matter?" he asked.

"You know d— well what's the matter," Eddie told him. "Now move."

"Now Eddie. . ." said Betty.

Sid Wise shrugged as a man does when faced with complete unreason. He flashed a smile at Betty and turned abruptly away.

"Gee, Eddie," said Betty. "We were only talkin'. What's wrong with that? I was waitin' for you, Eddie, and Sid just happened to come along."

"Come on," said Eddie roughly.

"I don't know what's the matter with you," she said. "I'm old enough to take care of myself. What harm can Sid Wise do talking to me on a public street?"

"I don't want that weasel near you," snapped Eddie. "I've said it before and I'll say it now."

"I get kind of sick of this, Eddie," she said slowly. "It's no fun for me to work all day and then wait till ten o'clock before you're through school. I don't mind waiting—" she went on hurriedly—"but you ought to let me talk to somebody."

"You can talk to people," he said in exasperation. "But why does it have to be Sid Wise?"

She shrugged. "You acted the same way about Tony Herro and Buck Civak."

He stopped, took her arm. "Listen, Betty. You know what I want. I want to get us both out of this neighborhood. I'm graduating this year and can get a decent job. We'll get married and move up north. Until then you can at least stay clear of Sid and Buck and the rest of those hoods. That's all I ask."

She flared back at him: "What do you want me to do? Talk to a bunch of grannies? The girls all go with those fellows. They're none the worse for it. They're—"

Eddie released her arm as though burned. "If that's what you think, you'd better stick down here. It's where you belong. I'm going to make something of myself, not be a cheap hood all my life. You can do what you d—n please."

She sighed and continued on her way. She and Eddie had been fighting a lot lately. Of course it wasn't easy for Eddie, handling freight all day and going to school at night. But it wasn't any fun for her either. She'd give anything for one night of music and laughter!

"Hello, beautiful," said Sid Wise. She stopped and he stepped from the car at the curb. Buck Civak was at the wheel.

"Where's Eddie?" asked Sid.

"He's gone home."

"Well, well. These students! Buck and me are going to the Dreamland; want to come along?"

"No. I'm tired," said Betty.

"Come on, if you're goin'," called Buck.

Sid was lighting another cigarette. "Well?" he said.

Betty shrugged. "All right. I'm leaving early though."

She sat between Buck and Sid in the front seat and Sid's arm was carelessly crooked over her shoulder. "We'll have some fun, eh baby?" he said.

Betty didn't answer. She was thinking of Eddie hunched at his desk; she could almost picture his bent, earnest face. He had told her that he slept fitfully while his head whirled formulas and a scarlet light shone behind his closed lids. Betty suddenly felt very small and a little mean.

"Come on, baby," said Sid. "Look alive. We're out for some fun."

"How about stopping for a drink?" asked Buck.

"Good idea. That'll wake Betty up."

"No, wait a minute," said Betty.

"I've got a better idea. There's a new girl working at the store. She's cute. Let's get her for Buck."

"Sounds good to me," said Buck. "I can always use a new filly."

"Where's she live?" asked Sid.

Betty gave the address. Sid is right, she told herself, I should wake up.

When the car pulled to the curb, Betty got out. "Be with you in a second," she told them. "We won't be long."

Sid was on his third cigarette when he said: "Cripes! what's keeping those dolls. Honk the horn, Buck."

Buck's hand hesitated over the knob. He peered with sudden intensity at the house. "Say . . ." he said slowly. "Ain't this the place where Eddie lives?"

Sid stared in turn. He flung away his cigarette. "Start the motor," he barked. "And if there's one crack outa you I'll bust your head."

Here's a Jump-Out-Of-Bed Breakfast

WHEN he wakes up in the morning, does he feel about half dead, and, alarm clock clamor scolding, pull the covers over his head? Does he want to sleep still longer, to stay cuddled in his nest, and, ignoring calls of hunger, try to get a further rest? Well, then, try this on the fellow, and you'll surely make a hit, for you'll find he'll wake up mellow and not hesitate a bit. But he'll fling away his covers and jump out of bed with zest, if the sweet aroma hovers of this breakfast at its best.

THE SAME COUNTRY

By ROBERT V. FLEMING
Vice President, American Bankers Association

There is a growing appreciation, both on the part of the people and the Government, of the earnest and sincere efforts being made by bankers to aid in recovery. It is desirable that we miss no opportunity to foster public understanding of the bankers' problems. We are living in an age of complex and upset economic conditions. Our affairs are closely inter-related not only within the confines of our own borders but extend to other countries throughout the world.

The Greatest Difficulty
I think the greatest difficulty we have to overcome in America today is due to our impatience with the progress we are making towards recovery. We must realize that while the Government can help by directing some measures for relief and recovery, we must help ourselves by doing our share to give impetus to the Government's efforts. We have the same country and basically the same businesses, factories and people we had prior to the depression, and business initiative must step forward if real recovery is to be achieved.

The theory we often hear expressed that banks create business activity is wrong. Banking can only make a supplementary contribution to business activity. Bankers have the facilities and the desire to extend credit, but business must initiate activity by seeking the credit which is readily available to all worthy borrowers.

Let it be said for business, however, that business men are as eager as bankers to contribute towards recovery. I think some of the trouble lies in the fact that too many legislative measures have been proposed for reform which leave an uncertainty in the minds of business leaders as to their eventual outcome and effect. Consequently, they hesitate to expand until the probable effects of such legislation are known.

MAKING IT HARDER FOR BANK ROBBERS

Mechanical Devices That Impede the Work of Bandits Described by Bankers Association Official.

The impediments which the hard working bank robber now meets in plying his trade among small as well as large banks are described by James E. Baum, Deputy Manager American Bankers Association in charge of its Protective Department, in an article in "Banking" published by his organization.

"Protective equipment will minimize if not prevent loss," Mr. Baum says, "such as the silent automatic type of alarm, approved tear gas systems, several styles of bandit resisting enclosures and time locks, or safes equipped with time locks, which can be set for intervals of a few minutes.

"The silent automatic alarms operate in the beginning of a holdup and through actions carried out by the bank employees in obedience to the bandits' own commands. They are adaptable to the smaller banks which continue to be easiest targets for bank robbery.

Tear Gas Systems

"Tear gas systems have their advantages as self-contained protective units where outside aid is inconvenient or too remote from the bank to be effective. One objection to the use of tear gas in preventing holdups is the need of pressing a lever or button to discharge it. Although this necessary action seems too much to expect of the victims in a crisis where their lives are in jeopardy, the fact remains that tear gas systems have defeated bank robbery. Its deterrent value is also important.

"Different styles of bandit resisting enclosures are available. The lock manufacturers also produce time locks which can be set to open at intervals of five minutes or longer. These locks are especially adapted for attachment to small safes or chests for safeguarding surplus funds while the bank is open for business."

Stock of Central Banks Usually Privately Owned

Of all the central banks at present existing there are only four whose stock is owned by the government. The newest central bank is that of Canada, which opened its doors only a few months ago after a most exhaustive study had been made of the experience of all nations with the result that the stock of the Bank of Canada is privately owned.

Agriculture and Industry

Returns for the first quarter of 1935 for industrial corporations publishing quarterly reports show net profits 21 per cent more than for the same in 1934. The total farm value of all important crops, exclusive of livestock, rose in 1934 to $4,782,423,000, as compared with $4,114,265,000 in the previous year and $2,882,195,000 in 1932.

Cherries Are Ripe

CHERRIES are cheery not only because of their bright color, but they bring cheer to the stomachs as well with their nice, tart, individual tang. So, without more ado, here are some recipes for cheery cherries which will make you cheer.
Cherry Tarts: Line scalloped tart-tins with pastry. Drain the red pitted cherries from a No. 2 can and cook the juice and two-thirds cup sugar to a thick syrup, add the cherries and cook until glazed. Drain again and cool cherries, then divide between tart shells. Mix one-half teaspoon cornstarch and one teaspoon cold water, add to syrup and cook until thick. Pour over cherries and bake in a hot oven from fifteen to twenty minutes. Remove to plates with small lace-paper doilies. Garnish tops with whipped cream rosettes.

Cherry and Cheap
And here's a cherry pie that's both cheery and cheap since it costs not more than thirty-five cents and serves six:
Cherry Pie: Drain the sour red cherries from a No. 2 can, and pour into a pie tin lined with pastry. Mix three tablespoons flour, one-half cup sugar and one-half cup of the cherry syrup, and pour over. Dot with butter. (You will need one tablespoon of it). Cover with narrow strips of pastry, and bake in a hot oven—425 degrees—for twenty-five minutes.*
