Shack That Housed Two "Unpaid" School Teachers Two Full Years

Two men teachers, getting uncashable "orders" for their salary pay, lived in this decrepit building in Dowell, Jackson County, Ill., two years.

"Please don't use my name," pleaded the principal of the elementary school in Dowell, Jackson county, Ill., when this picture was taken. "I have friends in other parts of the state and I'm ashamed."

This principal, an efficient young schoolmaster, who lived in this shack with another teacher two years, said he would have to stay in Dowell during his vacation this summer, adding, "I have no money and can't get out."

One man teacher in the school recently managed to buy a new suit of clothes with a "school order." Then he sold the suit because he had to have money.

But things are getting better. The men are out of the shack this year. One of them is boarding with a girl school teacher's mother. He added:

"She gives me room and board for 'orders.' I pay her $34 a month. She manages to cash the orders for groceries. So we're getting along." Two teachers in Dowell are getting $70 a month and two $60 a month "in orders." The orders have to be held about four years.

A mine has been giving the school waste "coal dust" to keep the building warm. Someone has to go to the mine and get it as the mine doesn't deliver the gift coal. There are 251 pupils and six teachers in Dowell; salaries have been cut 6 1/2 per cent in four years.

Teachers' orders outstanding total more than $10,800; warrants outstanding, $8,800; tax collections, 1933, were $6,877. Bond requirements, due this year, are $2,470.

When teachers were hired for the year they were asked:

"Can you finance yourself one full year without pay?" Orders have been unpaid since April, 1931. One girl teacher got some silk stockings recently. Her parents gave them to her.

Old Age Pension Bill Passes Senate

The Old Age Pension Bill has passed the Senate and it is now ready for the signature of the Governor, to become a law. Already the machinery has been started to raise the funds to take care of the law and it looks now that in a very short time the old people of Illinois will be taken care of in their old age. The bill is a real constructive piece of legislation and similar laws are in effect in several states of the Union.

That ample means for administering the Old Age Pension will be available is evidenced by the following bill which was introduced in the Senate and the House this week.

The sum of $5,000,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated from the General Fund of the State of Illinois to the Department of Public Welfare until the expiration of the first fiscal quarter after the adjournment of the next regular session of the General Assembly for the purpose of administering the provisions of the "Old Age Security Act," enacted by the Fifty-ninth General Assembly.

Damp Weather Reduces Chinch Bug Damage

We are informed by W. P. Flint, State Entomologist that, owing to the continued wet weather during the past few weeks, the number of old bugs have been considerably reduced. White fungus disease is very prevalent among the bugs that are still hibernating, as well as those which have moved to small grain fields. This is a disease which always develops among chinch bugs during damp weather and destroys them by the millions. The rank growth of the wheat caused by the damp weather will furnish further check on the bugs, so there is little possibility of much damage this year.

The Bad Dream

By GERTRUDE von BERNUTH
© McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

IT WAS a stormy winter night. The wind blew a gale, the rain came down in torrents, and Cynthia Blake was all alone in the Long Island house.

Cynthia didn't like being alone, and on a night such as this she hated it. Especially since it had recently been in all the papers that David had gotten a fifty thousand dollar executor's fee from the Dodge estate. That made her nervous. But she lighted a log fire and settled down beside it with her book, hoping against hope that the time would pass quickly. David would be home by 11:30 anyhow.

Eight o'clock, nine o'clock—surely that clock must be slow!—ten o'clock—and the telephone rang. Cynthia sprang to answer it.

"I'd like to speak to Mrs. David Blake." It was a man's voice, business-like, yet rather suave.

"This is Mrs. Blake," said Cynthia. "Oh! Well, Mrs. Blake, I'm afraid I have some disturbing news for you."

"Yes?" said Cynthia, striving hard for self-control. Something had happened to David! "What is it?" she asked faintly.

"Er—Mr. Blake has had an accident." Cynthia gave one cry of anguish and then forced herself to listen.

"Mr. Blake was on his way home in a taxi, and his car skidded on Queensboro bridge. I happened to be driving by and stopped to see what had happened. Mr. Blake isn't seriously hurt, but they insisted upon taking him to Bellevue for examination and treatment. His one worry seemed to be about his wife, so I told him that I'd phone you. In fact, I told him that I'd gladly take you in to Bellevue, if you cared to go."

"Oh, would you? That's awfully kind of you!" cried Cynthia. Her one wish was to get to David, darling David. That was all that counted.

"How soon can you be ready, Mrs. Blake?" asked the voice.

"In five minutes! Oh you're sure that my husband's not badly hurt?" she implored. "You're telling me the truth, aren't you?"

"Mr. Blake is not badly hurt. He may have a broken rib or two, but—"

"Come on, come on, cut it out," broke in a rough voice. "We ain't got much . . ." then silence, as if a hand had been suddenly placed over the mouthpiece. Then:

"That was some one who wants this booth, Mrs. Blake. I'll be there inside of fifteen minutes. Good-by."

As Cynthia put the receiver back on the hook, she was puzzled. Her fear about David seemed to have vanished. She began to be her usual cool-headed self. That other voice, so rough and snarling, "Come on, come on, cut it out. We—"

Cynthia raced upstairs to the extension phone beside her bed.

"Pennsylvania-6-3500," she said, speaking into the mouth piece again. "Hello, hello, is this the Bar association? Is Mr. Blake there this evening—Mr. David Blake? He was to be in conference with—"

"Yes, Mr. Blake is here. He's in room 510. I'll connect you with him if you wish."

"If you please," said Cynthia.

"Mr. Blake, please," said the voice. And then David's voice saying hello.

"Dave is that you?"

"Certainly it's I. What's up?"

"And are you all right?"

"All right? Of course I'm all right. What's the matter with you? I'm just starting for home."

"O. K.," said Cynthia, and hung up the receiver.

"Operator, I want the police," she said, taking down the receiver again. "I'll connect you," said the operator. Her voice sounded excited.

"Police station, One Hundred and ninth precinct. What is it?" asked a man's voice.

"Officer," said Cynthia. "This is Mrs. David Blake, at 20 Weybridge road, Bayside, Long Island. I have just had a phone call from a stranger who tells me that my husband has had an automobile accident and wants me to come to him in Bellevue hospital. The man said he would be here in fifteen minutes to take me to my husband. I have since located my husband by telephoning and he's perfectly all right. But I thought, if the man comes, I'd like to have the police."

"Humph! A snatch! We'll have some one there inside of three minutes, lady. Don't be scared. Take it easy."

Cynthia hung up the receiver with fingers that trembled. That was that. Now what? She sat tense listening for sounds outside, and finally heard a car coming up the road. Which is it, she wondered, the 'snatcher' or the police? She shivered a little.

Just then the telephone rang again. "This is Dave again," said her husband's voice. "I'm phoning from the Long Island station. Is anything wrong out there? I'm worried."

Suddenly Cynthia heard a commotion outside, and a shot rang out. "S all right, I dropped him," shouted a voice. "Where's the other one? Did he get away?"

"He won't get far. I blew his front tire, and the other boys are just coming up the road. They'll get him."

"Cynthia!" shouted David. "Is anything the matter? You're acting awfully queer. Why did you call me at the Bar association?"

"Oh, I fell asleep by the fire and had a bad dream," said Cynthia. "Tell you about it when you get home."

Fake Antiques

As Barnum so truly said, people like to be humbugged, and few fields offer greater opportunities for indulging their love of humbuggery than buying of antiques—paintings, fiddles, furniture and what not.

A Missouri paper tells of vast quantities of "ancient" candlesticks which have been sold to tourists as relics of pioneers who settled the Ozark country. It declares that more "antiques" of one kind and another have been sold than could be crowded into all the present homes and barns of that region. It relates that one man paid $1,400 for a walnut stump to be manufactured into "antique furniture used by Missouri pioneers."

Which recalls the statement of a wag to the effect that the natives of Samoa make a living by selling copra and Robert Louis Stevenson's inkstand.

Thrift and Crime

Encouragement of thrift as a means of reducing crime is suggested by a well-known publicist who declares that extravagant habits in many cases are the direct cause of banditry.

Aside from financial gains possible through economy and thrift the habit of saving has a stabilizing effect upon one's character. The person who is laying aside something each week or each month with the idea of ultimately securing financial independence is more dependable than one who spends his money as fast or faster than he makes it.

Many who have resorted to dishonesty in order to obtain needed funds quickly are those who have been first led into extravagant living. Allowing themselves to indulge in luxuries in excess of what their earnings warrant, they more easily yield to temptation to dishonesty in its various forms.

Habits of thrift should be inculcated early, and should be encouraged at every turn. Those who have acquired such habits are generally industrious, ambitious and honest.

What Ails Us

All diseases have scientific names, most of which would not be recognized by the layman. If your doctor asked you if you were troubled with anorexia, you probably wouldn't know. But anorexia is merely the scientific term for loss of appetite.

Similarly, otalgia is earache, notalgia is backache, nostalgia is homesickness, cephalgia is headache, odontalgia is toothache, variola is smallpox, varicella is chickenpox, pertussis is whooping cough, and so on throughout the long list of ills to which human flesh is heir.

And if your physician suggests that you are cacothetic, he is merely using a scientific way of saying you have a rotten disposition. If he tells you you are inclined to atony, he means you are just plain lazy. An unscientific wag once described laziness as voluntary inertia.

But whatever ails us, the doctors, like the Greeks, have a strange name for it.

A Link From the Past

Down in the village of Plateau, near Mobile, lives Cudjo Lewis, described by W. H. Blumenthal in the New York Evening

Post as "the most historic Negro in the United States," a title well bestowed.

For Lewis is the last living of all the slaves brought from Africa to this country, and made the trip on the Clothilde, last of the slave ships to bring a cargo to our shores, on the last trip of her unholy traffic in 1859. Lewis is supposed to be 96 years old.

With 109 others of the peaceful Tarkar tribe in Africa he was captured by the more savage Dahomeys and sold to the white slave trader, Captain Billy Smith of the Clothilde. The unfortunate suffered indescribable hardships during the 70-day voyage, being kept most of the time in the foul hold of the vessel with only a scanty allowance of bread and water.

They were finally landed on the Alabama coast and sold to various masters, whom they served faithfully. After the Civil War they gathered together to form a colony at Magazine Point, where they were employed in a shipyard.

But one by one they passed away, leaving Cudjo Lewis as the only link between the African slave traders and the present. He still cultivates his garden and serves as sexton of a nearby Negro church, in the graveyard of which his wife and six children are buried. He told Mr. Blumenthal:

"Some of dese days I tek time to die. When I go, I ain't got fur to go."

Sidelights

Persons accused of crime in Maryland may be tried by a jury or by a single judge, as they prefer. It is said that a majority prefer to trust their fate to one judge, than to a jury of 12.

Roscoe Penn is resting his aching feet in jail in Atlanta. Roscoe told police he became tired and sat down in an automobile to rest. When his foot struck the starter he was too tired to lift it. He is charged with stealing the machine.

Japanese dead are buried with their heads toward the north, hence it is considered by the living to be unlucky to sleep with their heads in that direction. On journeys some carry a compass, in order to get their bearings at bedtime.

Perhaps there is nothing in a name, but A. G. Luck of Bridge-well, Eng., probably believes there is. He insured his married daughter against the birth of more than one child, and when she bore twins he collected $5,000.

That rabbit fur is sold thruout the world under more than 60 names is quite generally known. But of late years, through scientific breeding, certain rabbits have developed coats quite similar to the furs of rarer animals. In such cases, perhaps rabbit fur isn't rabbit fur, after all.

In a Big Way

FLOSSIE DELL is to provide the next star for the Broadway firmament. Jimmy Boyle's stubby fingers tapped the typewriter keys in jerky tempo. "Hey! you louse!" he shouted to Bill Gates, movie editor, a couple of desks up the line. "Did you ever pick a winner?"

"Softly, Mr. Boyle, softly! Your language is hardly that of a gentleman. You were saying—?"

"I've picked a winner!"

"What!"

"A winner! Flossie Dell!"

"Who?"

"Flossie Dell. The blues singer at the Hollycrest."

"You poor sap!"

"I said the blues singer at the Hollycrest."

"Sorry. I heard you the first time. . . She's nothing to write home about."

"Listen to me!" Jimmy Boyle's husky voice deepened. "I'm telling you, Bill. That's a girl what's a girl!"

"You're crazy! She's punk on looks. She can't sing and she's a nobody. Tell me another bed-time story."

Jimmie told it next day in his column. And just in case she might miss it, he read the column to Miss Dell that night at the Hollycrest.

She yawned a little. "It's very nice of you, I'm sure, Mr. Boyle, to say such swell things about me!" Jumping up—"Geel! There's my cue!"

He waited till she finished singing. "Come on, baby," he begged. "Sit down and we'll drink to big movie contracts for little girls."

"It doesn't look well, Mr. Boyle," Flossie objected. "And besides I have to think of my figure." She stared at Jimmie's two hundred pounds. "You should think of yours."

The next noon Jimmie passed up corned beef and cabbage at O'Rourke's. "Training for a screen test?" asked Bill.

"What's the big idea, Boyle?" the managing editor demanded, when that day's column came out. "Turning press agent for a d—d night club singer?"

"She doesn't need one, Boss. She's marvelous! Have you seen her?"

"No! And I don't want to see you around here, if you plug her any more."

"Not a bad column you had in today's paper, Boyle." Tommy Leonard, Hollycrest's master of ceremonies, said that night. He patted Jimmie on the back. "Now that you've spoken of it, I can see possibilities in the girl myself."

At the end of a week Jimmie had lost fifteen pounds. "Do you see any difference, Flossie?"

"No, I don't." She shrugged her shoulders, then snuggling up close to Jimmie—"I might, if you wrote more about me. You're the only fellow that has the right slant."

It was three o'clock in the morning when Jimmie finished his column.

"The beautiful and talented Flossie Dell, scintillating blues singer of the Hollycrest, continues to draw record crowds," was his lead.

When the first edition came up the managing editor sent for Jimmie.

"Write a new lead for the next edition, Boyle!" he roared. "And stop at the cashier's desk for your pay the next time you write up Flossie Dell. I'm giving you one more chance. After that, you're fired!"

In the evening Jim was waiting outside the Hollycrest when Flossie came to work.

"Seen this?" He handed her a clipping of his first edition column.

"No." She held it up near a street light. The lamp that shone on Jim's column brought out the cheap prettiness of her blond hair and red dress.

"Gosh, Kid! I'm nuts about you!" Jim put his arms about her. "Let's give the old marriage game a chance. How does a license for two at the municipal building tomorrow strike you?"

She slipped away from him. "When I fall," her voice was taunting, "it's going to be for a real guy!"

"Meaning anyone in particular?"

"Yes."

"Who?"

"Tommy Leonard. I'm going to marry him!"

The red that Jimmie saw wasn't Flossie's dress. "You poor simp!" he shouted. "You don't know a real guy when you see one!" He caught Flossie by the shoulders, shaking her thin obstinate little body until her breath came in gasps. "I'm a real guy! Do you hear that?" He was sobbing. "I'm a real guy!"

Jim's desk was covered with torn bits of paper the next morning. Paper that he continued tearing into shreds, sitting, slumped down in his chair. Paper that had been stories of Flossie Dell.

Sweeping the litter to the floor, Jim reached in his desk for a photograph. It was a picture of Flossie. With a swift gesture he ripped it in half.

"Say, Boyle." The managing editor called. "I was wrong about Flossie Dell. She really is a comer. Write a column on her in a big way!"

Here's a Buzz About Early Spring Fruits

If you feel that you simply can't wait for spring fruits to ripen, control yourself and stay your appetite with some dishes made from fruits in cans. Model yourself on the bumblebee who would often rather buzz around an open can of fruit than around fruit hanging on a limb.

Can't you see—and almost hear—a bumblebee, for instance, buzzing happily in an apple orchard? Well, here's a dish that would make him forget the orchard and fly right in through the window if he caught you making it. Its name is foreign:

Fruited Spanish Cream: Beat two egg yolks slightly, add one-third cup sugar and one cup scalded milk and cook in a double boiler until it coats the spoon, stirring constantly. Soak one tablespoon gelatin in two tablespoons cold water, then dissolve in the hot custard. Cool the custard, add one cup canned apple sauce, one-half cup macaroni crumbs and one tablespoon lemon juice, and let stand until about to stiffen. Then fold in one-half cup beaten cream and one cup fresh strawberries, cut in halves. Chill. Serve in sherbet glasses with a few whole berries for garnish. Serves eight.

Buzz Around This

And here's another dish that would lure a bumblebee from his busiest activities outdoors:

Apricot and Figs en Casserole: Drain one cup canned apricots and one cup canned figs, and place in a buttered casserole. Make a roux of one tablespoon butter and one tablespoon flour, and then thin with the juice of one lemon. Add the fruit syrups, and pour over the fruit. Bake in a hot oven—400 degrees—for thirty minutes. Serve either warm or cold as a compote. Serves six.*
