Why Not A Community Building For Broadlands?

Many other towns throughout the country are building community buildings—something every town needs and should have. Broadlands—the best little town in the U. S. needs such a building for all kinds of community gatherings. Let's get it now—while the opportunity is golden—Uncle Sam being willing to pay part of the expense.

San Diego, Calif., is "saying it with flowers" in a big way. At the exposition now in progress there a 300-acre floral demonstration is depicting history from Spanish settlement days to the present in a gorgeous floral and architectural exhibit.

During the last few months it has been rather forcefully demonstrated that kidnaping in the United States doesn't pay. The prompt capture of the kidnapers of the Weyerheuser boy recently again illustrates the futility of this most devilish of all forms of banditry.

Celebrities no doubt often imagine that they are known, by their pictures at least, to nearly everybody, but usually they are not. Greta Garbo found that out not long ago when she went to the Los Angeles immigration bureau on business. When she told who she was the clerk asked: Have you any identification?

Modern Pioneers

The days of pioneering hardships seem to have passed. At least there is no evidence of discomfort or suffering in the accounts being received of the settling of Alaska's Matanuska Valley by Minnesota and Wisconsin farm families sent there by our Washington government.

These modern emigrants, it is revealed, are required to have equipment that would have been unobtainable, or even fabulous, in the case of settlers on new land as recently as a quarter-century ago. Each family must own a radio, and a household washing machine. If it does not, the government buys the devices and charges them against the family's credit.

Since each family is allowed $3,000 credit, and almost half, or $1,100 of this is being expended for its home, it is evident that the authorities directing the settling of these families in their new surroundings regard such equipment, taken for granted in every well equipped home of the United States, as being equally necessary for Alaska's new residents.

Dispatches announce that the first Monday of the new colony was signalized by the "dedication" of the families' washers. The transplanted women are colonists second and homemakers first. Swishing machines and fluttering clotheslines re-created in far off Alaska the first scene that truly reminded them of their familiar old home surroundings.

Farm Boys' Future

For a good many years various writers have seemed to be worried because farm boys leave the farm to seek their fortunes in towns and cities, as if the farm boy had not the same right to choose his career as other boys.

There would be as much logic in asserting that the son of a coal miner, for instance, should never aspire to be anything but a coal miner.

Of course, if a farm boy has no ambition to acquire an education, or no desire to enter business or a profession, or is not willing to apply himself to learning a skilled trade, he had better stay on the farm. Without some sort of practical education he would be worse off in a town or city than in the country, and would probably have to accept the lot of a common laborer.

But for the intelligent and energetic farm boy who can obtain an education it can not be denied that the towns and cities afford wider opportunities. In fact, many of the leaders in every field of endeavor came originally from humble farm homes.

While most of the trades and professions are crowded today, farming is also overdone. More farm products are produced than can be marketed at a profit over the cost of production.

Whenever the demand equals the supply we shall see better prices for agricultural products, and we shall also see people, young and old, going back to the farms. But until that time comes the farm boy should be encouraged to enter any vocation for which his talents and education fit him.

It may be added that there are right now excellent opportunities on the farms of the country for boys who will study and apply modern agricultural methods, but the future holds little in store for the indolent and shiftless, on the farm or anywhere else.
