A Dangerous Practice

It has been called to our attention that children attending the local public school make it a practice of using the hard road that passes the school to walk on, instead of using the sidewalk. Of course the pavement is nice and smooth and naturally children use it in preference to rough, worn out sidewalk. However it is a very dangerous practice in this day of fast automo- John M. Stop, execution, being saved by his American citizenship. He was sentenced to life imprisonment, however, but was released under the general amnesty of 1917.

In 1918 he was jailed again for fomenting another plot against the British government, but escaped by means of a key smuggled into his cell in a Christmas cake. Reaching Liverpool he Honor thy fellow motorist, disguised himself as a fireman and obtained passage to America, where he was hailed as a hero. In a tour of the United States he raised a large sum for the cause of Irish freedom.

After returning to Ireland and struggles, De Valera was finally chosen president of the Irish Free State in 1932, and was the same year elected president of the League of Nations.

This, in brief, is how a foreign country came to have an Amercan-born ruler.

"TO," said Betty. Her sister looked at her in despair. There are "Noes" and "Noes," just as there are noses and noses. Betty had one of the loveliest of noses, short and just the least bit tiptilted. She had also one of the firmest of "Noes."

Her sister Virginia who was little and confiding and sweet, looked in grieved surprise at this haughty, tipnosed Betty. Virginia was happily married to the grandest man in the world and she saw no reason why every girl shouldn't be happily married, too. And as Betty had a chance at the second best man alive, she certainly shouldn't be standing there and saying "No" in that heartless way.

For Betty and her Chuck had quarreled. Not the cheery, fun-to-make-up sort of quarrel, but the hard, unyielding one.

And then a ring had changed hands -not as it had a month ago, going on a small white finger. But flung out at a firm brown hand that had clapped it into a pocket. Since then, Betty hadn't sung about the house, and Chuckthere just wasn't any Chuck.

Virginia couldn't stand it. "You were both wrong, of course," she said. "You shouldn't have said Chuck didn't know what he was talking about-even if he didn't. And Chuck shouldn't have said women haven't any sense-even if they haven't. But you know how stubborn he is, Betty. If you'd just let him see you're sorry-"

"No," said Betty. "Betty," Virginia coaxed, "you've said you had such a happy time visiting me. You said you'd do anything on earth for me. You said I had only to ask a favor of you and you'd grant

This was a rather unkind reminder for it had been in the glorious flush of her engagement to Chuck that Betty had made that promise. Dancing around her sister's red and white kitchen, with the light through the casement windows reflecting red and white gingham flashed from a brand new diamond, she had assured Virginia of her undying gratitude.

Now she spoke stiffly. "I will be glad to do anything on earth but that, Virginia." Now brains weren't becoming to Virginia's style, so she always carefully concealed the fact that she had any. But once in a while when she dared let them have free rein, she looked as she did now. Wicked. Planning. "Well," she said, "will you make the salad for dinner for me? Bob likes it made just exactly by my recipe—and I have an errand downtown. Will you do that for me?" From sorrows to salads is a quick leap, and Betty blinked. She even looked a little taken aback at this matter-of-fact interpretation of her offer. But she nodded slowly. "I'm not much of a cook," she said. "But I'll try. Give me exact directions." She was planted by the window, right where the sun could shine directly on her pretty face and was busily chopping away when Virginia came out of the house, trim in ascot-tied scarf and tilted beret. A little dimple showed at the corner of her chin and she laughed softly as she hurried off. Chuck looked a little surprised when this sister of his ex-fiancee hailed him as he came out of his office, but he stopped politely, looking at her out of stormily unhappy dark eyes.

"Just the person I wanted to see," she told him. "Bob wanted me to ask you very particularly if you'd go over to our garage before dinner, and get the serial number of the car. He needs it for some trade he's thinking about."

If this was an odd request, Chuck was too miserable to think about it. He went off slowly, walking down the street and around the path that led to Bob's garage. It also led past the kitchen window.

That night at dinner, Bob took a mouthful of salad. Then he lifted his hand in surprise-

"Virginia-" he began.

But Virginia didn't hear. She was listening ecstatically to sounds outside the house-under the honeysuckle vine, to be exact. To two people who hadn't wanted any dinner-who had preferred to stay outside and look at the moon. "Isn't it lovely, Bob," she said. "They're starting all over again."

"I know," Bob agreed. "It's fine. Chuck said he couldn't hold out a minute after he went past the kitchen window and saw Betty with tears streaming down her face and her cute little nose all red. He said as soon as he saw how unhappy he'd made her, his heart just turned to water. But Virginia-"

"Yes?" "What in the world is in this salad? It tastes like solid onion. I like a flavor of onion in salad-but there must be all the onions in the Middle West in this one. What's the idea?"

Virginia smiled. She visualized the scene Chuck had come upon that afternoon-Betty, sitting in the kitchen window, her eyes streaming tears and her tiptilted nose scarlet-from peeling the dozens and dozens of tiny onions the impoverished recipe called for.

"Just a little system of my own," Virginia laughed, taking away the salad plate and substituting a dish of fruit-"if you can't change a 'No' try changing a nose."
