Miss Edythe Smith is Bride of Arthur Penny

Mr. and Mrs. John M. Smith have announced the marriage of their daughter, Miss Edythe, to Arthur Penny of Champaign.

The marriage took place Saturday, Feb. 8, in Chicago. The young couple was attended by Mr. and Mrs. Leach, sister and brother-in-law of the groom.

Mrs. Penny attended the University of Illinois and is employed in a North Side beaurorium in Chicago.

Mr. Penny is a University of Chicago graduate. He is now employed by Metropolitan Co., Chicago.

They will make their home at 600 E. 50th Place, Chicago.

Mr. and Mrs. John M. Smith gave a dinner for the newlyweds at their home last Sunday.

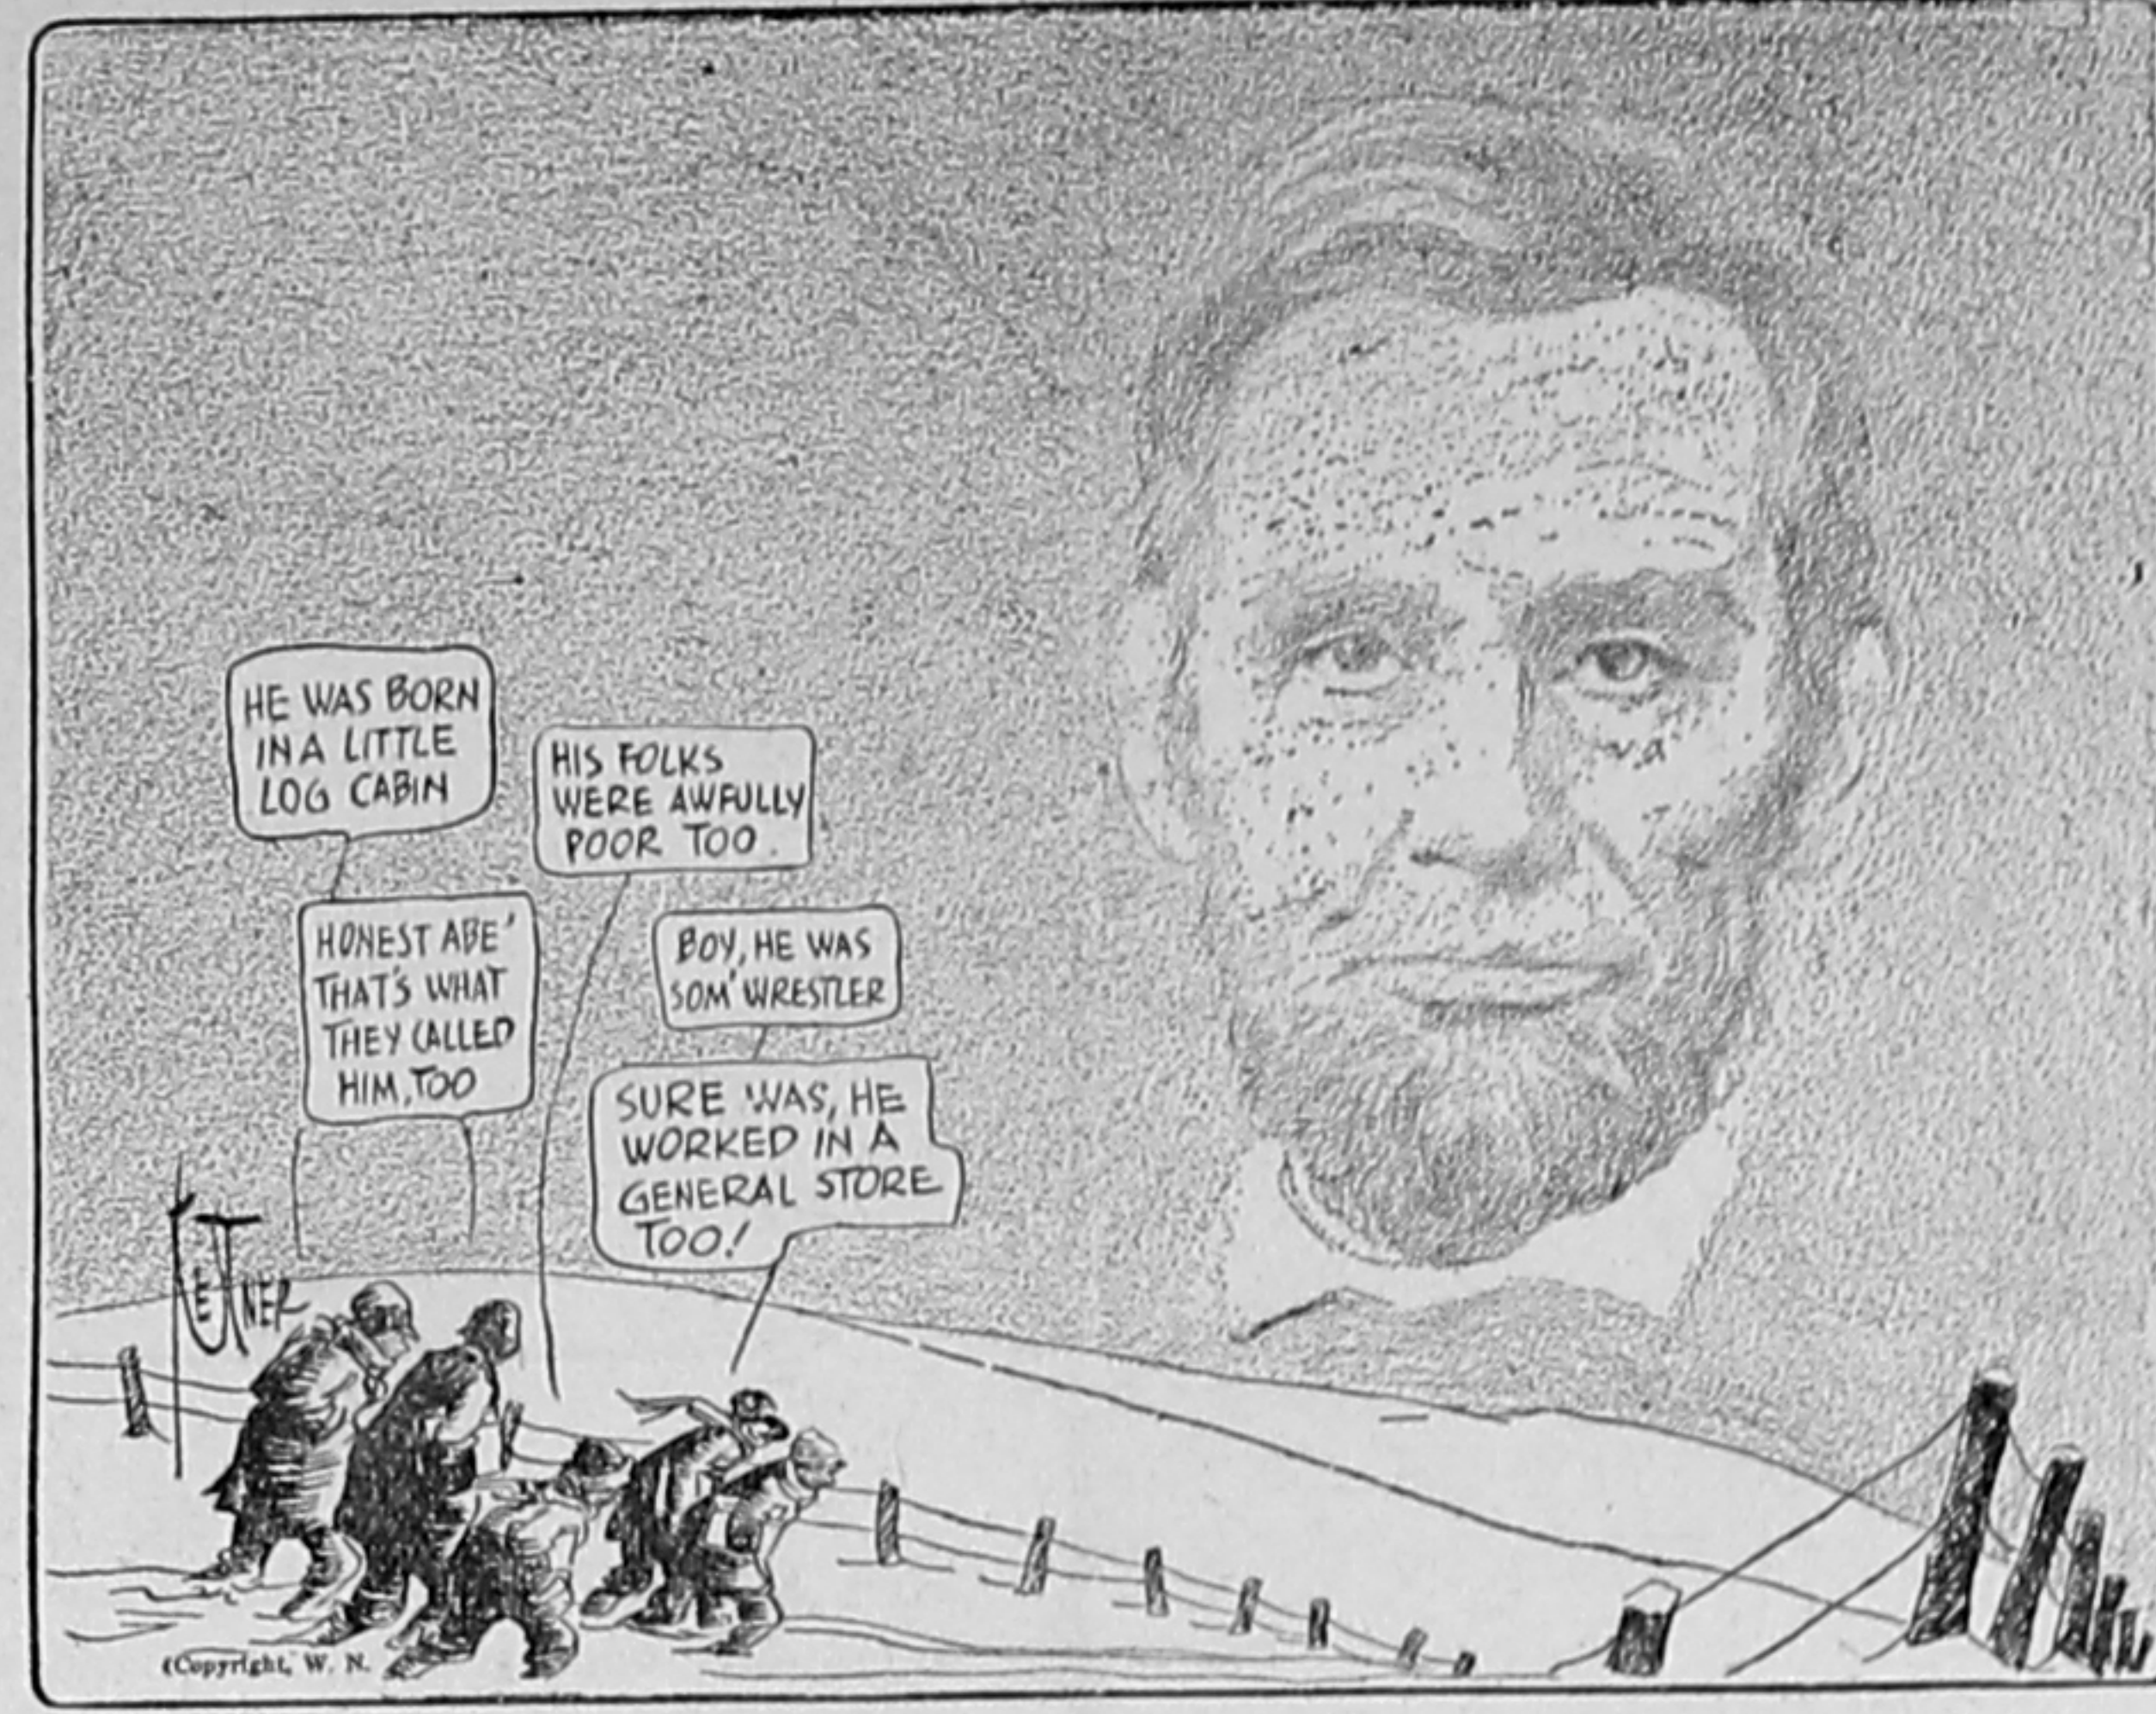

A. & R. Shipping Assn. Has Interesting Meeting

There was a large gathering of the members of the Ayers and Raymond Township Shipping Association in the Astell Building in Broadlands on Thursday night of last week. A sumptuous dinner was served by the Ladies Aid of the local M. E. Church, and an orchestra rendered music during the evening. Interesting talks were made by officials of the Champaign County Farm Bureau and others.

Farm Adviser Harris spoke on "The Tariff," Eugene Curtis spoke on "The Supreme Court," and Cecil Rayburn talked on "Shipping."

The highlight of the evening was the announcement by Ed Mulcahey that Albert Telling would speak on Tractorless Farming and Gurnsey Cattle.

Hope For First Pension Checks About April 1

In announcing the county's first old age pension board Tuesday, Judge Charles M. Webber announced a board of native sons. The appointees are Thomas Hagan of Champaign, Democrat; Clarence N. Riley of Urbana, Republican; Perry Starkey of Pesotum, Democrat.

The grand jury room has been assigned to the board as its meeting place. The appointees are planning a meeting to organize, select clerks, etc.

In conference with James H. Anderson, superintendent of the division of social assistance of the department of public welfare, County Judge Charles M. Webber was informed that by actual count there are 4,040 residents of Champaign County 65 years of age or older, and 40 percent are estimated as eligible for a pension. Judge Webber also was informed that it is likely there will be no pensions paid before April 1, as it will be a physical impossibility to do so. Every application will have to be carefully checked, and the amount of the pension decided upon.

The question is often asked, "may a person who has an income receive assistance?"

The answer is, "yes, if he has not sufficient to provide a reasonable subsistence."

Another question asked is, "May a person who is an inmate of a municipal, county, state or national institution, receive old age assistance?"

The answer is, "no, but a person who is an inmate or being maintained by any municipal, county, state or national institution may apply for assistance to be granted after he has ceased to be an inmate of any such institution."

Public Opinion Square Behind New Farm Plan

Farmers who attended the annual meeting at Decatur came away encouraged that an effective program for maintaining parity prices for farm products is in the making, says the IAA in a statement received by the Champaign County Farm Bureau.

There is now an evident spirit of unity and agreement among all partisan groups that a farm program must be worked out. Organized farmers see in this feeling an eventual realization of their dreams for a permanent plan that assures equal protection to agriculture against crop surpluses and ruinous crop levels of 1932.

The death of the AAA by a 6 to 3 vote has crystallized public opinion in support of a permanent policy for maintaining farm and national prosperity and has brought home the necessity of such a plan if recovery is to be complete. This opinion is based on the fact that the AAA was passed by an overwhelming non-partisan vote in both Houses of Congress.

Illinois farmers therefore believe that the new soil conservation plan being formulated at Washington will have similar support from the members of both major parties.

Candy and Books

Excepting text-books for the school children, the average American buys less than one book a year, while spending $10 for candy during the same period, according to a recent writer.

This statement is somewhat surprising, as is the further fact that among the leading nations the United States stands sixth in the number of new books published annually. This refers to separate titles, and not to the total number printed.

Another strange fact in this connection is that Russia leads in the number of new titles produced, in a recent year issuing 36,680, followed in order by Germany with 31,000, Japan with 19,967, Great Britain with 13,810, France with 11,992, and the United States with 10,153.

A Kindly Dictator

Mustapha Kemal, president and virtual dictator of Turkey, has ruled with a rather stern hand since he rose to power in 1922, and his official record would hardly indicate much sentiment in his nature, although his regime has been marked by many salutary reforms.

That he has a kindly heart beneath his rough exterior is evidenced, however, by his solicitude for the welfare of children, six of whom he has adopted, five girls and a boy.

The boy was tending sheep in the hills when the dictator ran across him and was struck by his bright, intelligent face, and also by the fact that the lad appeared undernourished.

Kemal took him in charge, sent him to a hospital to be cared for, adopted him, gave him his name and arranged for his education.

Thus a poor shepherd boy may one day rise to high position in his native land, because a mighty dictator—and a Turk at that—had a heart.

Judging Others

It is trite to say that in judging the character and motives of another person we should try to imagine ourselves in his place. But how many of us do it? How many of us make a conscious and determined effort to be fair in our estimate of the other fellow?

An unknown author has set forth some thoughts in this connection which are worth repeating, as follows:

When the other fellow acts that way, he is ugly; when you do it, it is nerves.

When the other fellow is set in his way, he's obstinate; when you are, it's firmness.

When the other fellow treats someone especially well, he is toadying; when you do it, it's tact.

When the other fellow takes his time, he is dead slow; when you do, you are deliberate.

When the other fellow picks a flaw, he's cranky; when you do, you are discriminating.

When the other fellow says what he thinks, he is spiteful; when you do, you are frank, and so on.

It is really hard to apply to ourselves the same yardstick which we use in measuring our neighbors. But we ought to try it.

The News is $1.50 a year.

New Pain Preventive

What is declared to be a pain deadener which will really make painless dentistry an accomplished fact has been announced by Columbia University as a discovery by Dr. Leroy L. Hartman of that institution's dental school.

The new desensitizer, perfected by Dr. Hartman after 20 years of research and experimentation, is described as a solution which when applied to the surface of a tooth not only prevents pain but offers possibilities of saving teeth which would otherwise have to be extracted.

It becomes effective in less than two minutes after application and remains effective from 20 minutes to an hour. The new solution's action is said to be made possible by a previously unknown substance in the dentin of the tooth.

The new discovery is to be patented and the rights assigned to Columbia University, which will control its price and quality, so as to make it available to the public and prevent commercial exploitation.

Dr. Hartman says the new desensitizer causes no after-effects, as do certain other drugs, and that its method of use is so simple that the patient need not be aware of its application.

If the new discovery does what is claimed for it, the dentist's admonition to "open wider, please; this isn't going to hurt" may in time be accepted with assurance by the patient in his chair.

Blue-Gray Reunion

After several years of discussion, a final reunion of Union and Confederate soldiers has been agreed upon, to be held at Gettysburg, Pa., in 1938, on the 75th anniversary of the decisive battle fought there July 1, 2 and 3, 1863.

The United Confederate Veterans unanimously agreed at their recent reunion in Amarillo, Tex., to accept the invitation of the governor of Pennsylvania to join with the Grand Army of the Republic in the 1938 reunion, but only on condition that they be allowed to carry the Confederate flag unfurled alongside the Stars and Stripes.

Some members of the G. A. R. insisted that the Confederate flag be furled during the ceremonies, but finally waived the point. There was a joint reunion at Gettysburg on the 50th anniversary of the battle in 1913, but on that occasion the Confederate flag was carried furled.

While the forthcoming joint reunion in 1938 will have high significance as a gesture of good will between former foes, it is doubtful whether any considerable number of veterans will be able to participate.

This year only about 500 veterans attended the G. A. R. encampment in Grand Rapids, the youngest being 85 years old. The ranks of the Confederates have likewise dwindled; few of either army will be under 90 by 1938, and it is inevitable that many of those who survive will be physically unable to attend.

But the spirit of the joint reunion will be the spirit of a united country, and as such should prove an inspiration to every American.

Direct Selling Has Increased Competition

Striking evidence of the competition for livestock which exists between interior markets in the Corn Belt is pictured in the map above which shows the situation as it exists in Iowa and Southern Minnesota.

The large dots show the 14 major interior packing plants, and the small dots the 70 concentration points and buying stations. The radiating lines indicate the points from which hogs are sold direct to these interior market outlets.

Overlapping lines reveal the competition which exists. The map does not show the competition from central markets, from the more than 600 retail dealers and small packing plants which slaughter livestock, nor the competition from packers in other States that is available to producers in Iowa and Minnesota who sell direct to those markets. If these were added, the map would be too black to read. Competition of much the same nature exists between direct markets in other Corn Belt States. Of interest in this connection is the following quotation from U.S.D.A. Miscellaneous

Publication 222, "The Direct Marketing of Hogs:"

"There is a market difference in the character of competition at public markets and at interior buying points. At public markets the competition is for a supply of hogs that is physically present, largely out of the control of the producers, and under the necessity of early sale. At interior points it is a competition to draw hogs, that are still under the control of the producer, to different points. Competition at the public markets is more apparent than at interior points since relatively large numbers of buyers and sellers in personal contact are readily observable at the former, while at the latter the chief evidences of competition are the posted prices and the telephone or personal requests being received for bids on hogs.

But to the producer at home with hogs for sale, the latter competition is more useful since he is in a stronger position opposite the buyer with his hogs still at home than he would be if they were at a public market and had to be sold."

Streamline

Your Menus

EVERYTHING is going streamlined nowadays—automobiles, airplanes, trains, furniture, clothes and even menus. But you can streamline the latter during these languid summer months without streaming with perspiration yourself over a hot stove. The method is simple. Just use canned foods which need little cooking, and see how much fuel and energy you save and what satisfactory results you can attain.

You can streamline your guests, too, by making them stream up to a buffet table and help themselves to the dishes which you have prepared with so much ease. In that way it's really easier to entertain fifty people than it would be to serve fifteen with all the formalities of sitting down.

A Summer Buffet

Let's try it. Say someone in your family is getting married. Or say the weather is torrid, but you suddenly feel that you can't wait another moment before beginning to repay an accumulation of social debts. Here's the menu for an appropriate streamlined buffet:

Lobster Salad Sandwich Loaf
Buttered Cloverleaf Rolls
Pineapple Cream Sherbet Cake
Strawberry Grapefruitade
Coffee

Salted Nuts Mints
 And here is the way to make delicious lobster salad without the bother of boiling any lobsters and in a minimum of time. Remove the tendons from six 12-ounce cans lobster, cut into large pieces and marinate in one cup tart French dressing for an hour or two. Then add three-fourths cup finely diced sweet pickle, three-fourths cup finely diced stuffed olives, one-fourth cup finely diced dill pickle, two tablespoons capers, three cups chopped cucumber and eighteen hard-cooked eggs cut into eighths, tossing all lightly together to avoid breaking pieces. Add mayonnaise to mask slightly, forking in gently. You will need for this from two and a half to three cups of mayonnaise. Serve on lettuce. Serves fifty. And there you are!

Plenty of Fruit Juices

Remember that it's hot, but there are plenty of cooling fruit juices in this streamlined menu. There is lots of pineapple juice in the Pineapple Cream Sherbet: Soften three tablespoons gelatin in two-thirds cup cold water, then dissolve in one quart boiling water. Add six cups sugar, dissolve, and let mixture cool. Add five cups scalded and cooled cream and the contents of five No. 2 cans pineapple juice. Freeze. Serves fifty.*

Strawberry Grapefruitade: Boil four cups sugar and three cups water for five minutes; then cool. Hull two quarts strawberries, wash, crush, add one cup sugar, let stand for an hour, then add to the cold syrup. Add the juice of twelve oranges and six lemons and the contents of two No. 2 cans grapefruit juice. Just before serving, add three quarts gingerale, and serve over a large piece of ice in a punch bowl. Serves fifty.*

Direct Selling Has Not Lowered Livestock Prices

The period of greatest growth in the direct selling of hogs in the United States occurred from 1924 to 1933. During that period, the portion of the hog crop sold direct rose from 22.05 to 43.85 per cent.

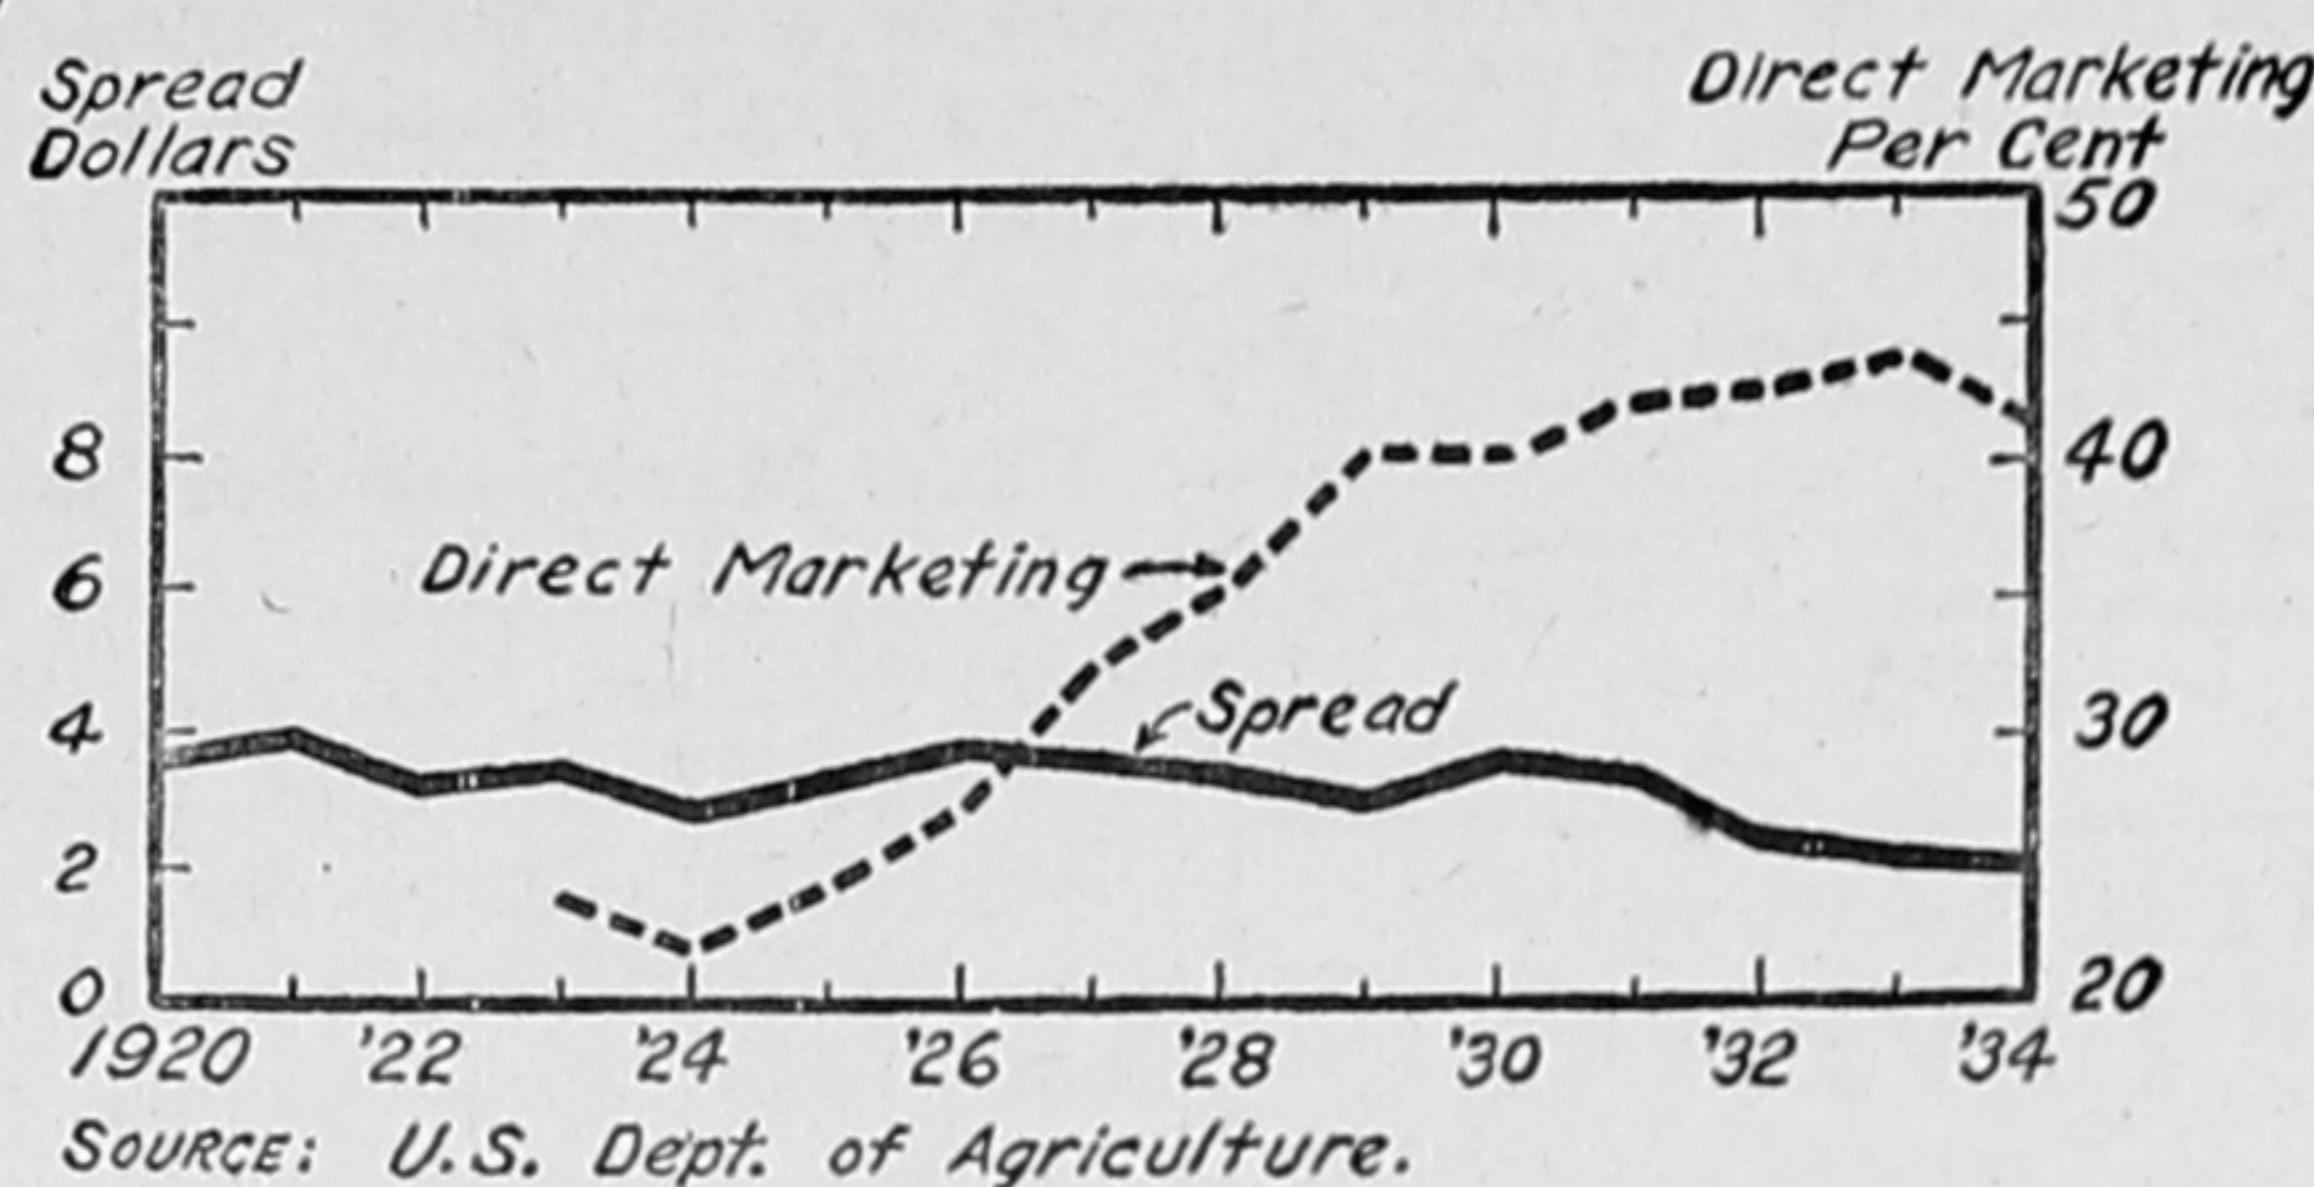

During these ten years, packers' margins, represented by the spread between live hog prices and wholesale prices of hog products at Chicago, maintained a fairly steady level. The minor fluctuations which occurred were due to changes in the cost of processing and distributing meats, including expenditures for labor, freight, rents, taxes, materials, etc. In 1932 and 1933, when these costs tended to diminish, packers' margins narrowed correspondingly, yet during this period direct selling was at its highest level.

The significant point is that the increase in the percentage of hogs sold direct to packers has not reduced returns to hog producers. Since the general level of wholesale meat prices is governed by the purchasing power of consumers, the only way that direct selling could have reduced returns to hog producers would have been by causing a widening of packers' margins. That it has not done so is illustrated by the chart, data for which were provided by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

During the past year, four out of every five dollars of the packing industry's income from livestock products was paid out for livestock. Of the fifth dollar, nearly half went into payrolls, a fourth was spent for supplies, power, fuel, etc., and a fifth for repairs, insurance, depreciation, taxes, interest, and other operating expenses. This left available for profits only about one-sixth of a cent per pound of livestock handled. Since it handles a tremendous volume, the packing industry can make a reasonable profit even on a small margin per pound. For the ten years from 1925 to 1934, the packing industry averaged approximately 3 1/4 per cent profit on its investment, according to figures of the Packers and Stockyards Administration of the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Packers' Margins on Hogs at Chicago

The solid line shows packers' margins on hogs at Chicago, as represented by the spread between live hog prices and wholesale prices of hog products. The broken line shows the percentage of the U. S. federal inspected slaughter of hogs sold direct. It is evident that the increase in the direct selling of hogs has not caused any widening of packers' margins.

STELLA NORTON poked the pillows into a more comfortable angle at her back and picked up the open letter on the counterpane. Two warnings in one morning were sufficient to rouse her to action. Etta's telephone call had followed immediately on the receipt of a letter from the ingenue of the company whose jnuendoes had not been as carefully veiled as she had hoped.

It would be like Billy to get roped by a chorus girl. Stella was frankly panicked.

"I had a letter yesterday from Fay Campbell who is in Chi with 'Pretty Baby,'" Etta had said in the cat-has-eaten-a-mouse-tone. "She says that Billy sure likes 'em young and snappy. There's a blond baby—"

"Oh, yes," Stella broke in, confident, however, that Etta would not believe the hastily invented lie, "that's Margie Ray's cousin and Billy got her with the show."

It was only the second time in their twenty years of married life that Stella had been separated from Billy. The first had been when Jane Ann was born eighteen years before. Jane Ann was the most exquisite mortal ever created, in her parents' opinion, and was still safely tucked away from the turmoil of their theatrical world in a small exclusive school in Cleveland.

Warnings had reached her then, as now, and just a few weeks after the infant's birth, Stella had lost no time in rejoining the troupe of which Billy Taylor was the leading comedian. The chorus girl who had understudied her none too well on the stage, had endeavored to replace her out of the theater.

Poor Billy! He was so susceptible. A trim ankle was as provocative to him as a sweet pea to a bee. Not that Stella believed that he had ever been more than mentally untrue to her. But it had been a slightly difficult life keeping him clear of scrapes.

"There's no fool like an old one," she muttered. "At your age, Billy Taylor, you should have some sense."

An inconsiderate appendix had sent her to the hospital just a few days before June Francis opened in Cleveland. For six weeks she had raged and fumed, for not only a well founded fear of Billy's misadventures prompted her anxiety, but also an acknowledged fact that Billy never played as well as when she was present.

"Billy ought to consider Jane Ann," Stella fussed. "Doctor or no doctor, I'm going to leave for Chicago tomorrow. I won't wait another week. That may be too late."

Stella carefully timed her arrival in Chicago. She drove directly to the hotel where Billy and she always stayed and had her bags checked in the parcel room.

"Don't you want to go up, Miss Norton?" the clerk who knew her, inquired. "It's a surprise for Mr. Taylor," she refused. "I'll go directly to the theater, but if I should miss him, please do not mention that I am here."

She would drive to the theater and park the taxi opposite the stage entrance, she would follow Billy, and . . . It was another nasty mess she feared, but she was not taking any chances with her happiness or Jane Ann's. Billy of course would be penitent, as always.

Stella sat back in the corner of her cab watching. The matinee jam evaporated. One by one the members of the company emerged, blinking in the bright light of the late afternoon sun. Stella's heart beat more rapidly. Any moment now and Billy would come.

The echo of Billy's effervescent chuckle reached her and she leaned as far forward as she dared, without being seen as the comedian's long slight figure appeared. With him was Jane Ann clinging adoringly to her father's arm.

What was Jane Ann doing there in Chicago? Stella shook her head to clear her eyes and then leaning forward, her arms extended, called to the pair standing in the shadow of the stage door.

"Billy—Jane Ann."
"Stella!"

"Stella!" Billy Taylor was half in and half out of the automobile, his arms around her and his lips on hers. "Stella, old girl, this is a surprise! I didn't expect you for weeks."

"So I see," she lifted her daughter's face to hers. "Jane Ann, what are you doing here?"

"Oh Mommie, darling," Jane Ann flung herself in the waiting arms, almost strangling her mother in her embrace. "I knew you would never let me go on the stage; not for years and years and years. When Daddy left Cleveland I ran away and met him at the train and he just had to take me with him, didn't you, Billy dear?" she appealed. "And Mommie, darling, no one knows who I am. I use a stage name and I'm in the chorus, and I love it so."

Stella Norton sat between them, an arm encircling each. This was the one time she need have no fear of a Blond Baby. Perhaps if Jane Ann were with him, Billy would be so busy teaching her the tricks of the game he knew so well he would have no time for anyone else. And after twenty years of vigilance, some rest was due her. . . .

"Oh, Mommie," their daughter was pleading, "please don't send me back."
Stella patted her hand gently. "You haven't an ounce of sense, Billy Taylor," she scolded, but both husband and daughter read the laughter in her voice. "The minute my back is turned you get into mischief, both of you!"

The Marriage Problem

By VALENTINE WILLIAMS
Author of "The Man With the Club Foot," "Island Gold," etc.

Wives Will Become Equal to and Independent of Their Husbands

BECAUSE I hold that the trend of the modern world is toward a higher standard of morality. I believe that marriage, perhaps fifty, more certainly a hundred years hence, will be an infinitely looser tie than it is today, but saner and much more precise in its definition of responsibilities.

Talk of divorce, or of easier divorce, immediately brings the religious authorities to their feet in protest. That is as it should be. The Christian religion, always striving upward, made of marriage a sacrament not only to elevate above the purely physical the solemn act of begetting children, but also to secure the proper realization of the responsibilities deriving from this act.

In a world in which women, morally and economically, occupied a definitely dependent role, marriage was their only shield against social ostracism and misery, the sole safeguard for the children against neglect and abandonment, the mainstay of the idea of the family as a cell in the organism of the state. On material, quite apart from religious, grounds the churches are quite right to hold inalterably to the present institution of marriage until the respective responsibilities of man and woman in the relationship of the sexes are more precisely defined.

As an institution marriage was primarily devised in the interest of the children. The state of a hundred years hence, I am firmly convinced, will have assumed the free education of every child on sane and homogeneous lines. Early marriage will be encouraged by government subsidy; the mating of diseased individuals will be made a felony punishable by loss of civil rights as part of the penalty; criminal lunatics, morons and the like will be sterilized, and, the soil being clear for the production of healthy progeny, a bounty will be paid on the birth of every child.

Marriage has never been a bar against immorality, but in the world of tomorrow the state will insure that the sins of the father (and mother) are not visited upon the children.

With the pulling down of class barriers mankind is becoming increasingly intolerant of restrictions. For this reason, among others, I have expressed the view that marriage is inevitably destined to become a looser tie. But all responsible statesmen recognize that the home is the basis of national stability, and governments of the future, while forced, as I think, to ease the fetters of matrimony, will meet the tendency to take excessive advantage of easier divorce by remedying the economic abuses which, in our Twentieth century, lead to the break-up of so many homes.

By 2000 A. D. socialistic ideas of taxation, already now on the march will prevent the accumulation of great private fortunes. There will be a leveling down of wealth all around which will enable governments more efficaciously to secure the economic independence of the married woman.

I believe that the wife of 2000 A. D. will be legally recognized as the equal and independent partner of her husband. She will be entitled to draw a proper housekeeping allowance, based on a fixed percentage of her husband's means, this percentage being proportionately augmented with the arrival of each baby.

Women who are wage-earners themselves will be compelled to contribute, but on a lower scale. Marriage will be a partnership which either party can apply to the courts to have dissolved, as in business, if the other partner fails to comply with his obligations.

This arrangement will cover not only the case of the husband who stints his wife of money in the interest of his private pleasures, but also the case of the type of modern woman who marries for a good time and neglects her children and her home as well as her husband.

In the case of divorce, or dissolution of the partnership, the state, which will be the trustee of all children, the citizens of tomorrow, will see that the children concerned, legitimate or illegitimate, are properly provided for, according to the disposable means. Thus the man who, to marry, abandons an illegitimate family, will no longer get off with a derisory payment dragged out of him, after much expense and publicity, through the courts. Alimony dodgers will be heavily punished, and I fancy that the childless wife, often no doubt unjustly, will get no alimony at all.

To sum up, easier divorce, hedged about with such sanctions as I have outlined, is the direction in which we are progressing.

But I do not believe that easier divorce will mean more divorces. Today men and women are tearing down the veils which false modesty has drawn across the simple truths of the propagation of life, and their descendants, a hundred years hence, will enter upon the state of matrimony less heedlessly but with open eyes, to the greater endurance of the marriage tie and the increased happiness of the human race.

Historic Gal!

Marion Rodgers, of Dallas, is the great-great-granddaughter of a Texas soldier who died in the famous "lottery of beans," after the battle of Mier in 1842. Of the 176 Texans captured by the Mexicans, 17 drew black beans from an earthen bowl and were shot to death, 159 drew white beans and were sent to a Mexican prison. Miss Rodgers, whose grandfather, Horace Isa Houston, was a first-cousin of Gen. Sam Houston, is a rangerette for the Texas Centennial Exposition opening in Dallas June 6.

A VISIT TO THE BELGIAN QUEEN

TEN women physicians, from as many countries met in Belgium for a conclave. Among them was a friend of mine from Iowa. It had been arranged for them to meet the Belgian queen. When the appointed hour came they were ushered into a long salon of the palace, to await her majesty. Much excited were these visitors, no one of whom had ever before seen a queen. Most of them were able to speak English, although some brokenly. The question on the lips of each was, womanlike, "How will the queen be dressed?" "Will she wear a velvet gown, have jewels in her hair; will she be tall and queenly?" These subdued conjectures stopped as the attendant asked the physicians to form in line to meet the queen. Immediately the queen was announced and her majesty came smilingly into the room.

Extending her hand to the first visitor, she said, "So your home is in England, I love the English resorts, we play over there whenever we can." The next physician in line had come from France, and the queen in passing told her of her recent visit to Paris. The American physician stood third; to her the queen expressed her gratitude for the wonderful horses Iowa had sent to Belgium in the past. Thus through the line she went, until she had spoken personally with each one.

After she had gone, the women looked their complete satisfaction, "a real queen" they voiced in unison. "What kindly eyes she had," said one. "Her low well modulated voice I shall never forget." "Her handclasp was firm but so gentle." Said another, "She seemed sincerely glad to meet us, she had a personal word for each." Suddenly some one asked, "How was the queen dressed?" The ten women recalled only with difficulty, for jewels, or lack of them passed unnoticed, when they looked into her eyes.

Thus this gift, for it is the greatest of life, can be a part of everyone who genuinely desires it. It is not alone the attribute of queens, though it is a queenly trait. Personality cannot be taught in six lessons as I saw recently advertised in a weekly magazine. It comes from the heart, it must be lived years before it becomes one's whole being.

The queen had put her queenly adornments within her heart instead of upon her head. Her crown of jewels was an understanding heart. Is this not within the reach of each one of us?
