NEW HILL'S DEPT. STORE, DANVILLE, ILL.

Located at 12 East Main Street, opposite Court House

Local Residents Like to Shop at Hill's Dept. Store, Danville

Residents of Broadlands who have visited the new Hill's Dept. store, 12 East Main street, opposite Court House, in Danville, Ill., are loud in their praise of this up-to-the minute retail establishment which offers local folks another store in which to shop when in Danville. Hill's Dept. Store has become an established Danville institution overnight with modern methods and popular merchandising policies which have won great success in other Illinois stores that they operate. Cheerfully refunding money on purchases, unexcelled service at all times and a "customer is always right" policy has quickly won public acceptance which spells success for Hill's Dept. store in Danville.

J. P. Armon, manager, has a successful background of twenty-five years in merchandising circles during which time he held responsible executive positions with some of the largest retail institutions in Chicago. Mr. Armon is greatly pleased with the reception accorded Hill's and the fact local residents are fast becoming steady patrons of this new store.

Hill's Dept. store carries merchandise for the entire family, included are ladies ready-to-wear; men's and boys' clothing; ladies lingerie and hosiery; infants' and child's wear; yard goods; shoes for the entire family; men's furnishings; linens; notions; cosmetics and other lines too numerous to mention. All merchandise is style-right, and because of Hill's great buying power patrons always find prices they will gladly pay there.

Hill's Dept. store will use the columns of the Broadlands News to keep residents of Broadlands fully advised on sales and bargains offered. Watch for Hill's messages and take advantage of the opportunity they offer.

Gizzard Inspection

In a certain district of Columbia, South America, every chicken killed must be presented to government authorities for inspection.

This is not a health measure, such as governs the sanitary slaughter of food animals in this country but is a requirement to prevent the chicken owner from coming into unauthorized possession of any stray emeralds which may happen to be found in the bird's gizzard.

For in that section is located the only emerald producing territory in the southern continent, and fowls often pick up the precious stones in preference to ordinary gravel.

An American company is conducting emerald mining operations in Columbia, using the primitive methods employed by the early Spaniards, because the region is so inaccessible as to make the transportation of modern equipment too costly.

However, recovery of emeralds by the chicken method is only a minor phase of the enterprise.

Useful Wedding Gifts

A woman writer in the Household Magazine discusses the desirability of giving useful wedding presents and makes the following practical suggestions:

"Most of us are in a flurry as to whether or not our bride friends will have tested recipes and good kitchen equipment. I think it is as important that a man finds clean hose in their accustomed place, when he gets up in the morning, and a shirt that he can depend upon to make him feel presentable, as that he is served a slice of toast that is a rich, golden brown and coffee made the way he likes it. If I were a man and had to take my choice between the coffee and the shirt I would take the shirt, and I believe most men would.

What a helpful and appreciated change in wedding-gift buying there will be when a washing machine of the bride's choosing is purchased by a near relative, when the stationary tubs in the laundry are considered as important when the new home is furnished as the stove, and when a friend may feel confident about bringing a neat little clothes-pin bag filled with clothes pins to a shower! There should be no thought of such gifts being too prosaic, or too imbued with the suggestion of hard work.

The bride-to-be will appreciate your help in equipping her home laundry. A clothes hamper and a drying rack make splendid wedding gifts."

Origin Of Baseball

While baseball as we know it is a sport of comparatively recent development, a game in which a tossed ball was batted with a rude club has been traced back to the 14th century in Europe. The present American game was probably an outgrowth of that of "town ball," played in New England from about 1830 in which the runs were made around posts set in the ground, instead of bases.

The first code of baseball rules was formulated by the Knickerbocker club of New York in 1845 the first match game was played the following year, and the first gate money series of games took place at Hoboken in 1858. The development of the game was checked by the Civil War, but was revived in 1865, when a convention was held at which representatives of 30 clubs were present.

A Rockford, Ill., team first employed regularly salaried players, but the Cincinnati Red Stockings, organized in 1868, is considered the first professional club. It made a tour in 1869, winning 69 games without meeting a single defeat. In 1870 it won 29 straight games, being defeated in the 30th by the Atlantics of Brooklyn.

Gamblers having gotten control of the game, a convention was held in Louisville in 1876, at which strict rules to overcome bribery, betting by players and other abuses were adopted, and the National League was formed. There are now more than 20 professional leagues, of which the National and the American, originally the Western (formed by Ban Johnson in 1793) are the two "big leagues."

Life Large and Small

Some interesting reflections on the size of living things are made by the noted scientist, Julian S. Huxley, in a magazine article. Many of the facts which he relates are not only interesting, but surprising.

When we speak of living things, in the broad sense, we must include the vegetable kingdom, so the largest living things are to be found among the big trees in California. These, incidentally, are also the oldest, with an age of around 5,000 years.

These trees, some weighing nearly 1,000 tons, are massive indeed when compared with the largest animal, the whale, whose weight seldom reaches more than 100 tons. Yet a large elephant could maneuver inside a whale's skin.

Most wonderful is what we find among the smaller orders of life. We can see a flea, though with difficulty catch him, yet 80,000 would scarcely weigh an ounce.

Some of the insects which are hardly visible to the naked eye are fitted out with compound eyes, a nice nervous system, three pairs of jaws and three pairs of legs, veined wings and striped muscles. Tiny birds weighing only 10 grams, or about as much as 10 large ants, fly thousands of miles during their migrations. And ants, by the way, are the strongest living things in proportion to their size.

Man is about half-way in the scale between large and small mammals, and when grown he contains about a hundred million cells. He requires all his brain as well as his strength to cope with the great animals on one side and the insects on the other. And then there are the microbes to worry about.

Seventeen Year Locust

Word is being flashed over the state that the so-called 17 year locust will appear in this state about May 1st in considerable numbers.

In the curious features of its life history the locust is the most exceptional and interesting of all the insects on the American continent. The most remarkable of these peculiarities is its long period of underground existence ranging from 13 to 17 years. The 13 year race occurs mostly in the southern states, except in the Mississippi River Valley where it extends northward.

During these periods its existence is unsuspected and undisturbed by any superficial sign, but at the end of the allotted term of years the insect appears in countless thousands.

Ever since its first appearance in 1664 more or less superstition regarding the locust has been in vogue among some people. For instance the dark bars on the filmy wings which resemble the letter "W" foretell war to the superstitious. These bars are simply a characteristic marking and are always present on all broods of this specie.

In view of the damage often done by the sudden appearance of certain insects in countless numbers those acquainted with the periodical locust are fearful of great damage to trees and shrubs when this insect emerges.

Young orchards can be saved from stinging injury by covering the trees with cheese cloth before the insect begins to deposit eggs. The protection should be removed immediately after the egg laying period, otherwise injury to the twigs may result from dampness due to their being crowded together by the cloth if it is left on too long.

Safety hint: Don't try to turn a corner that isn't there.

Sidelights

A resident of Cairo, Egypt, is charged with a serious shortage. He is called upon to account for 60 wives who have disappeared during the last 30 years. Some are said to have been divorced, but most of them died under suspicious circumstances.

Following an admonition by his editor to condense his news stories, a London reporter covered a tragedy thus: "Sir Edward Hopewell, a guest at Lady Panmore's ball, took a highball, his hat, his overcoat, his departure, a taxicab, a pistol from his pocket, and finally his life."

After divorcing her husband, Mrs. Mary Draft of Philadelphia consented to permit him to remain in their jointly-owned home as a boarder. The plan didn't work satisfactorily, however, as she later told the judge: "I had to put him out, because he began beating me just as if he was still my husband."

George E. Feser, 54-year-old war veteran of Oakland, Calif., recently read his name and the number of his regiment on a gravestone at the Presidio of San Francisco, and wrote to the Veterans Bureau. The bureau informed him that he was listed on the records as dead, but Feser asserts that he is very much alive.

The Marriage Problem

By ARNOLD BENNETT

Author of "The Old Wives' Tales," "Hilda Lessways," "These Twain."

Marriage Bonds Will Be Greatly Loosened

A HUNDRED years is not a long time, in the history of manners. Nevertheless immense changes have occurred in the institution of matrimony during the last century; changes so immense and on the whole so beneficial that any serious attempt to return to the old state of things would produce a revolution.

Those changes have been mainly in two directions. First, toward the equalization of the rights of wives and husbands. Second, toward a loosening of the bonds of marriage.

There has been no appreciable sign of a reaction. Hence, seeing that much remains to be done before laws and social customs are brought into line with the more enlightened common sense of the country, it is reasonable to assume that further changes in the same direction will come about.

Indeed, I should suppose that the difference between 2035 and 1935 will be at least as marked as are the differences between 1935 and 1835.

But I admit that, as regards the equalization of rights, legal and customary, progress, having gone so far, can only go on in proportion to the advance of the wife's economic independence.

As regards the bonds of marriage, in both the legal and the customary sense, they are absolutely certain to be loosened still further. Despite recent ameliorations, gross injustice yet persists and the innocent are thereby martyred. Divorce will be easier; and it will be cheaper; and it will be less humiliating.

At any given moment a considerable body of public opinion will say:

"Progress has gone far enough. To go further would be to damage irretrievably the structure of society."

I am convinced that in 2035, if one or both of a married pair demand a dissolution of the bond after having ceased to live together conjugally for a prescribed period, the bond will be dissolved on the strength of that plea alone. Such a development, when the time comes, will be generally welcomed and approved.

And it may, and probably will, lead to the practice of experimental marriage. Experimental marriage would be disguised and called by another name; for there is likely to be just as much hypocrisy then as there is now.

But that young people should be irrevocably bound by a step which in the very nature of the case they must take in the dark will doubtless strike posterity as absurd. Anyhow, I hope it will. And this development, too, when the time comes, will be welcomed and approved. There will be disadvantages, but the advantages will outweigh them.

I hear the warning phrase, "The thin edge of the wedge." And to this admonition I reply that I once had an aged relative who always refused to touch cards, "lest they should get a hold on her."

So much for the legal aspect of the future.

Turning to the customs and habit of mind toward married life, I believe that 2035 will have clearly perceived that the origin of trouble in most marriages is the too close and too constant companionship of the twain, who get sick of one another.

In our day this evil is almost unavoidable for the great majority, because money and leisure are necessary to avoid it, and the majority have not enough of either. A holiday from the everlasting dalliance of married life is a luxury obtainable at present only by the rich (who wisely take care to obtain it).

Luxury and leisure are, however, steadily increasing and will increase much more; and in the days to come it will not be considered a tremendous and dangerous event for any husband or wife to leave the partner at home.

There is a type of mind obsessed by the notion that all married persons who suggest a furlough are straining at the leash. It merely is not so.

Twenty thirty-five will see a delightful but temperate elasticity in the geographical movements of husband and wife, an elasticity by which society will assuredly profit.

Of course, the existence of numerous young children is an obstacle to such elasticity. But there will then be among all classes, as there are already among the upper classes, fewer young children.

Except by those who invoke a divine sanction against it (and I respect their view), family limitation is universally practiced by educated people today, and in 2035 it will be universally practiced by all ranks, with measureless benefit to the body politic.

Twenty thirty-five will refuse to be intimidated by a silly phrase such as "race suicide."

Lauds Citizenry for Supporting State Institution in Its Work.

"More new wealth for Illinois comes out of the University of Illinois than can ever be created under the dome of the Capitol at Springfield!" So believes Wheeler McMillen, editor of the COUNTRY HOME, published in New York City.

"Our country is deeply indebted to the achievements of science and of education for additions to its wealth, now that we have passed the pioneer period," he said. "Scientists at work at the Illinois Experiment Station and the educators who cooperate by carrying their findings to farmers, are the most powerful of agents for increasing the output of new dollars from Illinois soil. Everyone knows, of course, that all our new wealth has to find its origin in the soil, mines, forests, and the fisheries, and unquestionably the soil is far the most important of these sources in Illinois, as it is in the United States.

"It is splendid for the citizens of a democracy to pay generous attention to the political phases of their public affairs," he agreed. "One should have no less interest in what happens at Springfield and at Washington, but I do think we should pay vastly more attention to what happens around our scientific and educational institutions. I doubt if anyone can point to a single law passed in the history of Illinois that has added as much new wealth to the state as has been created in consequence of the scientific work in soybeans at the Agriculture Experiment Station. Your Station's achievements in the field of animal husbandry, as well as in crops, have not only been veritably distinguished, but have been exceedingly productive.

"I doubt if any of the dollars invested anywhere out of the huge budget of the state of Illinois do more for the people of the state than the relatively few dollars expended annually in the scientific work at Urbana," he concluded.

Father of 'Electric Eye' Hopes for One Even More Sensitive

The father of the photo-electric cell, commonly known as the electric eye, announced on the eve of his departure for six months of study and research in Europe, that he has devised a new method of making photo-electric cells which promise to be more sensitive than the cell now in universal use.

Prof. Jakob Kunz, University of Illinois physicist, first developed his photo cell in 1909 and further improved it during the next two years. His was an alkaline cell and it was such an improvement over the selenium cell that it soon replaced the less efficient predecessor and became indispensable in science and industry. The selenium cell showed fatigue immediately while Kunz' alkaline cell evidenced no fatigue with usage and remained constantly efficient.

Kunz's cell was so sensitive that it reacted to light from a star that could not be seen with the naked eye. His new work promises to be even more sensitive.

"The new method involves the use of colloidal alkali vapor," Dr. Kunz said. "This vapor has very interesting optical properties. Both industry and science, especially astronomy, require more and more sensitive cells and I have hopes that this new one will satisfy this need."

The photo-electric cell is used in talking motion pictures, television and in innumerable automatic devices in industry. All of the important observatories of the world use it, and it has also found use in the sciences of medicine, zoology, ceramics, etc.

Prof. Kunz will study in Germany, France, Switzerland and Russia in the field of theoretical physics.

20% of U. of I. Freshmen Ranked Highest in H. S.

Twenty per cent of all freshmen admitted to the University of Illinois last fall ranked scholastically in the highest 10% of their high school classes, according to a study made by Registrar G. P. Tuttle, results of which have just been announced.

Sixty-eight per cent of the entering class ranked in the upper 50% of their high school classes, the figures also showed.

The scholastic records made at the University by the present freshman class will be summarized at a later date in order to see the correlation between grades in high school and scholarship in the University. This latter information will be of importance to University administrative officers in those cases where University performance has been seriously out of line with predictive scholarship as measurable by success in high school.

University Operates New Speakers' Bureau

In response to the large number of requests for speakers which come to the University of Illinois each year, announcement has been made of the organization of a Speakers' Bureau to take care of such requests.

Members of the teaching staff, research workers, and others connected with the institution, will be asked to all the engagements, will be asked to be self-supporting, a fee sufficient to meet travel and incidental expenses will be charged.

A scientist declares a mosquito can fly 14 hours without lighting. But it seldom does.

After taking a fourth wife, a Massachusetts shoemaker may possibly stick to his last.

Dull pupils cheat more than bright ones, says a teacher. But maybe the bright ones were too smart to get caught.

A Buffalo man reports the loss of $22 taken from his trousers pocket while he slept. The case is more mysterious because he has no wife.

VOTE THE ANTI-BOSS DEMOCRATIC TICKET

Renominate GOVERNOR HENRY HORNER WHO SAYS:

"I'll give up the Governorship and step out of politics before I will betray the people of Illinois and submit to the yoke of political serfdom decreed by 'Boss' Kelly, self-styled overlord of Chicago and would-be dictator of all Illinois!"
