Tuscola Undertaker Hangs Himself in Garage at Home

Cliff Waddington, Tuscola undertaker, hanged himself in the garage at his home on Wednesday evening, May 20. Despondency over the loss of his wife who also died by her own hand last January is believed to have been the cause of the tragedy.

The body was found hanging from a rafter in the garage by Tack Green, his associate in business, who had been called to the home by Waddington's housekeeper, Mrs. Glenn McFarland, who feared something was wrong when she discovered his hat and coat on the kitchen table about 5 o'clock in the evening and Mr. Waddington was nowhere to be found.

The deceased was 57 years of age and had resided in Tuscola for the past 18 years.

WISHBONE VS. BACKBONE

DID you ever hear of a person having a wishbone where his backbone ought to be? It is not evident physically, but this is often the case. A little lad once said, "I'd give a hundred dollars to be a millionaire," and as the years passed by, he kept wondering through life why it had not come to pass.

In Paris there once lived a young violinist, on the top floor of a cheap pension. As a student he practiced hour after hour. His landlady had been instructed never to knock on his door, when she heard him playing. Many a time coming up the long flights with his lunch she found the first tray still untouched, and placing them side by side, she stole away softly still hearing his playing, playing, playing. He became one of earth's great artists—but it was bought with sacrifice. Do we not often say we wish we could play like an Heifitz? And yet how unwilling are we to pay the price—above $100 to be a millionaire!

"Effort is the price of everything." Oftentimes with effort comes sacrifice, which is the basic rock of appreciation and achievement in life. We appreciate and achieve only as we are willing to sacrifice. That was the secret of the striving of the Pilgrim Fathers and Mothers. Love of ease has turned many a brave heart soft.

A university student at examination time prepared his room for study. He chose the lounging chair with pillows and soft shaded lighting. On a tilted stand he laid his book at the angle easiest for him to read and turned the radio on. He started to study. Started, to be sure, but got no farther, for he fell asleep. Love of ease had conquered him. His backbone grew soft and he soon found himself wishing he could pass his finals like some other men of his class. He became a mental invalid as far as study was concerned.

The world is turning a slow curve, but it is turning. The time has passed when one rich man's son may nonchalantly spend three millions on his own pleasure yacht for his own selfish soul. Our children shall live to see the time when young men living on unearned money will not hold the center of the stage, to be envied, as scions of wealth, whether it comes by stock-marketing or inheritance. Honor must come through their own effort and achievement.

Our country needs men and women of backbone, who as yet, are far outnumbered by those of wishbone. GO is the start to GOAL.

Sacrifice All To Keep Love in "Shanghai"

Is love ever strong enough to crash down the barriers of race, to face the scorn and hatred of the world.

This is the problem with which paramount's "Shanghai" deals. Starring Loretta Young with Charles Boyer, the picture comes to the Broadlands Theater this Friday and Saturday nights.

Two people are brought together by the eternal impulse of love in the capital of the Orient, the strange city where the world's oldest culture meets and conflicts with the world's youngest and strongest.

The man, Charles Boyer, is a mysterious figure, who has risen from Shanghai's slums to become master of the finances of an empire. The girl, Loretta Young, is American, brave, impulsive and beautiful.

While Boyer is preparing the decisive moves which will make him master of all the East, he is rapidly falling under the spell of the girl's beauty. Because of her he wishes no longer to conceal the secret of his ancestry and he reveals himself as—the son of a Manchu princess.

Shanghai society is aghast. Even Loretta Young hesitates to tell this man, whom she now knows as an Oriental, that she loves him.

Confused and heartbroken, Boyer flees the city for the interior of China. But Loretta Young has faced her problem bravely, and she follows him to the castle where he seeks refuge. In a tender, moving climax these two confess their love and come to a strange decision.

This will be the last show of the season at the local theater.

Electric Rates

It is remarkable how an insignificant matter may be magnified in our minds by ballyhoo and demagoguery. A case in point is seen in the agitation concerning electric rates, which has been carried on by certain radical politicians in recent years.

In spite of the fact that electric rates have been steadily lowered ever since the inception of the power industry, due to improved methods of generation and greater consumption, the clamor against the industry has grown in intensity.

Yet the average bill for household electricity is less per day than the price of one package of cigarettes, and in most cases is less than the tax alone on a gallon of gasoline.

And speaking of taxes, the average family's tax bill is about $490 a year, while its electric bill is only $33.72. The politicians who agitate so wildly against electric rates are in most cases the very ones who are responsible for piling up the ever increasing tax burden.

And it might also be borne in mind that out of every dollar the consumer pays for electricity the company which serves him must pay from 12 to 15 cents in taxes of various kinds. But the radical politician never mentions that.

American Horses

During the period of Indian wars in the west, the redskins generally had good horses and ponies, which they rode splendidly and often successfully in their combats with United States troopers sent to quell their many uprisings in the years following the Civil War.

It is natural to assume that the Indians always had horses, but such is not the case. The Indian got his first horses from the white men, for at the time of the discovery of America this continent was horseless, and all the horses which exist here today are descendants of animals brought over by Europeans.

Going back to the Ice Age, however, fossil remains show that many horses roamed over both North and South America. In size and appearance they were very much like the ordinary horses of the present. How they came to disappear centuries ago is an unexplained mystery.

Going back still farther, remains of many varieties of primitive horses have been found, some not larger than a shepherd dog, with three and even four toes.

The earliest horses were no larger than a fox, and the eyes were set far down on the head, midway between the ears and nose.

The magnificent Percherons of the present are descendants of the lowly five-toed critters of the past. But if they could talk they would perhaps decline to admit it.

Animals Keep Sunday

An interesting fact concerning the lions, tigers and leopards in the New York Zoo is related by the director of the park.

Describing the feeding of the various animals, he states that these big representatives of the cat family are fed only red, raw meat, with an occasional dash of cod-liver oil. Beef is generally used, but horse meat is also given them at intervals. But the interesting thing concerns the day of fasting these animals must undergo once a week. The director says:

"Sunday is their fast day, and they know it. On week days just before 2 o'clock the whole cat house livens up. The tigers pace about, the lions stretch and watch the front of their cages, the leopards leap over each other and like as not the pumas start an argument that may get serious before the keeper reaches their cage. But 2 o'clock on Sunday is just 2 p. m., and passes with no more attention than any other hour."

Now the question is, how do these animals know when Sunday comes? Can they count the days? There seems to be no other explanation; or if there is the director doesn't give it.

Bunk About Vitamins

A lot of the propaganda going about concerning dieting and vitamins is the bunk, according to Prof. Solomon Strouse, a well-known scientist, who declares that the normal diet of normal persons provides all the vitamins needed.

All this talk about vitamins, he says, is something comparatively new, dating only from 1911. Much attention has been given to the subject, but even today little is really known about it. Manufacturers of yeast and special foods have attempted to capitalize the popular idea that vitamins are an all-important component of one's diet, but many of the claims made by advertisers of food fads are foolish. Prof. Strouse asserts that all nutritional needs will be met by a diet including a quart of milk daily, two fresh salads, two servings of leafy vegetables, one serving of meat and liberal quantities of butter, cereals, fruit, bread and water.

He adds that when the nutritional needs of people suffer because of poverty or a disturbance of the food supply, ill health can apparently be traced to the lack of something in the diet, but this does not necessarily mean a deficiency in any particular vitamins.

From all of which it may be concluded that almost any kind of wholesome food provides a satisfactory diet, so far as maintaining health is concerned. But faddists must have their fads, and if following a fad makes a faddist happier, why not let him go to it?

The Spread Of Divorce

Many persons still living remember away back when it was considered something akin to disgrace to get a divorce, except for the most compelling reasons. Today divorces and annulments of marriages are so common as to excite only passing comment.

An interesting table showing the spread of divorce in this country is contained in the World Almanac, giving statistics on the subject running back to the year 1883, when the percentage of divorces to marriages was only 5.4. Since then divorce has increased with almost continuous regularity, until it has reached 17 for every 100 marriages, or about one out of six.

Taking the record of 40 years by intervals of 10 years we find the following: There were 6 divorces for every 100 marriages, in 1891; 8.2 in 1901; 9.3 in 1911; 13.7 in 1921, and 17 in 1931. During the same period the number of marriages per 100,000 population has shown a slight increase.

The lowest number of marriages, population considered, during this 40-year period was in 1894, when there were 8.6 marriages per 100,000 of population; the highest was in 1920, when the number rose to 11.98. Taking actual figures without considering the increase in population, it is shown that in 1888 only 26,669 persons in the United States were divorced, while the highest number was reached in 1929, when no less than 201,469 couples were released from their marital bonds.

The most distressing feature of this rapid and continuous spread of the divorce habit is that more than 100,000 children are affected by it each year.

Stock Feeding Notes

Some valuable information concerning the feeding of livestock, especially with respect to the protein content of the most desirable feeds, is given in an extract from the Yearbook of Agriculture, issued by the government.

It states that many investigators have demonstrated that equal amounts of protein from different sources may not be equal in nutritive value, this value depending on the amount of certain amino acids. Because of the phenomenal increase in the use of soybeans to supply the protein element in stock feeds, considerable space in the government publication is given to a discussion of their desirability. It says in part:

"Soybean oilmeal is a highly nutritious and palatable product having a nut-like flavor relished by all animals. It has a good distribution of amino acids and is recognized as a well-balanced vegetable protein. It is highly digestible and has a very desirable physical effect on animals. As the valuable properties of soybean oilmeal are becoming better known it is growing in popularity as an ingredient of mixed feeds for poultry, dairy cows, beef cattle, hogs and sheep."

Commercial feeds containing soybean oilmeal as a protein ingredient are also recommended by a number of state experiment stations which have conducted tests with these feeds.

Sidelights

Louis Springborn of Chicago has a sensitive nature and brooded over the fact that his family turned up their noses at him when he brought home only $18 after staging a robbery. Then in a sudden fit of disgust he gave himself up to the police declaring he would go straight.

A case of accidental treatment that got a surprising result is reported from Mount Holly, N. J., where a red hot cinder flew into Herbert Bowden's right eye, which had been blind for 22 years. The pain was severe but when it subsided it was found that the sight of the eye had been restored.

In the recent Kentucky Derby one of the jockeys tumbled from his horse, which recalls a Will Rogers story. A jockey was being reprimanded by the owner of his mount for not winning a race, and when his boss had finished he meekly replied: "I reckon I shoulda done it, but I couldn't bear to come in without the horse; I'm that fond of him, sir."

Edgar Peterson of Pomona, Calif., and other points west became a super-salesman early. Before he was 17 he had sold an oil derrick, a barn, two unoccupied houses, a sugar company employees' club house, and other property, none of which he had ever owned. Police nabbed him at Phoenix, Ariz., where he was about to sell a railroad train to a Pullman porter for $100.

Minneapolis-Moline Dealer, Homer Shelburne,
Fined for Speeding on His New "J" Tractor

Homer Shelburne, M-M dealer at Ogallala, Nebraska, and owner of a new Twin City Universal "J" tractor paid a fine of $10 and costs Saturday afternoon, March 7, 1936, for speeding with a tractor which exceeded the speed limit of 18 miles per hour.

Marshal Manges tagged Shelburne on complaint of a citizen who asserted Mr. Shelburne crossed the intersection at Spruce and First at a greater rate of speed than the law allowed.

The Marriage Problem

By INEZ HAYNES IRWIN
Author of "Phoebe, Ernest and Cupid,"
"Happy Years," etc.

The State Will Set by Law the Amount of Her Husband's Salary Due a Wife

IT WILL all be very different a hundred years from now—this matter of marriage. It will not be the poet's or the lover's dream of happiness; on the other hand, it will not be a bugbear.

Of course, the possibility of making permanent the dream of happiness of the poet and the lover has never existed. That happiness has always shown the swiftness and brevity of the lightning flash. For present-day conditions it is a mirage, a fata morgana, an ignis fatuus. There is no reason to suppose, whatever the conditions, that we shall ever achieve that kind of happiness permanently, least of all through so complicated, so perplexing, so irritating a human relation as marriage. But another kind of happiness, a permanent one, does exist—that sober serenity which comes from happily occupied heads, hearts, hands.

In a hundred years, perhaps, we shall have learned better than to expect an eternal ecstasy from marriage. At that future time, also, we shall have learned to make both marriage and divorce as easy as possible.

To marry you will have only to go with your partner in the matrimonial scheme to the local city hall and register your intention of becoming married. To divorce you will have only to go to the same place and register your intention of becoming divorced.

In a hundred years from now social progress will have automatically removed certain inevitable bunkers in the matrimonial game.

There are many of these bunkers: money—particularly money—for money is not only the root but the trunk, branch, leaf, flower and fruit of all evil; children—for children sometimes push their parents apart instead of holding them together; the position of women in the matrimonial partnership, incredibly inconsistent and degrading; the high-pressure economic burden laid upon the husband—a burden so heavy that often it drains from him all capacity for happiness, curtails his very life; the well-known emotion—good old love itself.

Take the question of money.

A hundred years from now it will be established by law exactly what proportion of his salary the wife, as his partner in the matrimonial undertaking, may demand of her husband.

A hundred years from now it will be established by law exactly what pension the mother—as the partner in population production with the state—may demand of that state for each child she bears.

A hundred years from now society will have changed, or at least modified its attitude toward the woman partner in marriage.

In these times the wife receives what compensation her husband chooses to give her for her services as wife and mother—and that only during good behavior. In these times, the husband keeps for himself whatever share he wants of the family income—and that during good behavior—or bad.

A hundred years from now the wife's share in the family income and a pension from the state being settled by law, the question of her behavior will lie between herself and her God.

Take the matter of economic responsibility of the husband. Just as a hundred years from now the wife's lot will be lightened, so will the husband's—for much of the financial burden will be taken from the man's shoulders.

The state has come economically to his rescue in pensioning his wife for bearing children. That pension, plus the salary which the law compels him to pay his wife, has turned her from a drudge to a comrade.

There remains only one factor to create unhappiness in the matrimonial situation—the well-known human emotion, good old love itself. Love has always made a great deal of trouble and a great many varieties of trouble. No rule governs it. It is capricious, personified. It comes. It goes. It appears when it is not wanted. It departs when it is needed. It alights hither and yon.

Only one general statement can be made in regard to it—that, like lightning, it rarely strikes in the same place twice. How are we going to cope with love, nobody knows. It is like weather or static. Nothing can be done about it.

But do we really want to analyze, map, chart, chain, cabin, crib, confine it? Only perhaps for the benefit of the love-lorn.

Possibly in time science will discover a serum with which the lover, on discovering that the dearly beloved no longer cares for him, can inoculate himself, thereby producing a state of complete indifference. I scarcely expect that as soon as a hundred years, though!

AT LEAST 25% of all the cream separators in use are wasting enough butterfat to pay for NEW DE LAVALS

Sterling Series
The standard line of De Laval Separators—the best designed, cleanest skimming, easiest running, most durable separator ever made. Hand or power drive. 4 sizes.

Golden Series
A "de luxe" line—identical in construction and efficiency with Sterling Series, with addition of convenient features.

De Laval Electro Series
The all-electric separator. Ideal for the large dairy. 3 sizes.

De Laval Junior Series
World's best low priced separators. Smaller sizes sold with or without stand. 5 sizes.

De Laval Milkers
The world's best milker. Thousands are in use.

TRY A DE LAVAL—THE WORLD'S BEST THEN BUY ONE FOR PAYMENTS AS SMALL AS $1.00 A WEEK

IT is estimated that from 25 to 50 per cent of all the cream separators in use today are wasting butterfat—enough in many cases to pay for a De Laval in a relatively short time.

Even though your present separator may be running satisfactorily it is no assurance that you are not losing butterfat. A simple and easy way to check it is to try a new De Laval; then you can tell exactly the amount of cream a new De Laval will give you and whether or not it will pay you to own one. We will gladly arrange a free trial.

Then if you find a new De Laval will increase your earnings you can obtain one for payments as small as $1.00 a week, so that it will pay for itself while you are using it.

The present De Laval Separators represent the greatest values in 58 years of De Laval's leadership. They skim cleaner, run easier and last longer than any others.

There are four complete series, providing 17 different sizes and styles for every need and purse.

In addition there are two complete lines of De Laval Milkers, which will enable you to milk your cows faster and better than ever before, and give you more profit and pleasure.

Bluebonnet Suit

Eleanor Akers, Texas Centennial Exposition Rangerette, dons her customary chaps and 10-gallon hat to wear this bathing suit made of bluebonnets, the official state flower. The Exposition, a $25,000,000 World's Fair, opens in Dallas June 6.

Rivals for the affections of a modern girl also frequently race neck and neck.

Creation of new countries and renaming of old cities since the World War have about repealed all the geography we learned in school.

Peck—When I get married I intend to be the boss or know why.

George—Don't worry. You won't be long finding out why.

He—Can you recall the two happiest days of your life?

She—Certainly; the day I was married and the day I got my divorce.
