Champaign County Fair, August 25-28

St. Joseph, August 6—It has been announced by Everett R. Peters, fair secretary, that August 27 and 28 have been designated as "Political Days" at the Champaign county fair to be held here August 25-28 inclusive. August 27 has been designated as "Democratic Day," while August 28 has been set aside for Republicans. Leaders of both parties have signified their intentions of bringing Governor Henry Horner and C. Wayland Brooks, candidates for the gubernatorial post, to the fair on their respective days.

Committees in charge of the fair are well underway with plans to make the eighth annual Champaign county fair the most successful ever held. An enlarged premium list has caused an increase in early entries, and fair officials are optimistic for a new record in the number of exhibitors for 1936.

The entertainment committee expects to spend approximately $2,000 for entertainment, and hopes to announce the complete program within another week. Pearson's shows, one of the outstanding carnivals has been engaged to show on the fair's rialto.

In planning the entertainment program the committee was not slack in arranging entertainment for the dancing element, when it engaged Jimmy Garrigan and his 14 piece famous dance orchestra for the last three nights of the fair.

What's Your Hurry? Why All The Rush?

What's your hurry? Why all the rush? Don't drive so fast. You'll get there in plenty of time driving at a reasonable speed, says the Safety Department of the Illinois Agricultural Association. The difference between safe driving and reckless driving is only a few minutes at best on the average trip, says C. W. Seagraves, safety director. And nobody's time is so valuable as to jeopardize life and limb of other people, to say nothing of your own.

Give the other fellow, particularly the man on foot, a break. It takes time to stop a car.

Remember other folks drive cars too. Maybe there's one behind you. Stick your arm out if you decide to turn, slow up, or stop.

Blow your horn when you pass a car on the highway. Be on the lookout for the child who suddenly dashes into the street. Watch for the kids on bicycles. Their judgment may not be good.

This month when you go to the Fair or off on a vacation, drive carefully. Cut down on the number of accidents. It pays.

Youth Dies of Injuries In Motorcycle Accident

Basil Ambrose, 21, of Chicago, was fatally injured last Wednesday night about 10 o'clock, when he ran into a cow with his motorcycle near the George Messman home on Route 49. The young man was found by passersby and was taken to a Champaign hospital in an ambulance where he died on Thursday morning. The cow was the property of George Messman and was killed instantly it is thought. Young Basil had visited with friends at Allerton a number of times and was quite well known there.

Charles Wendling Mashes Fingers in Car Bumper

Sidney, Ill., Aug. 1.—Charles Wendling, prominent farmer residing six and one-fourth miles southeast of Sidney, received three badly mangled fingers on his right hand Saturday morning.

The hand was caught between the bumpers of two cars that had become fastened together when Wendling used one to push the other. When he tried to disconnect the bumpers three fingers were caught, cutting the ring finger off at the first joint and badly cutting and bruising the other two.

He was taken to the office of Dr. Charles Metzler at Sidney, where the end of the finger was replaced.

Special Election, Aug. 20

Town Clerk Harold O. Anderson has posted notices of a special election to be held on Thursday, Aug. 20, submitting to the voters the question whether a special tax for road purposes be levied for improving, maintaining and repairing certain earth roads in Ayers township by oil treating the same. See specimen ballot in this issue.

Pre-Fair Activities

"Tough" Seems Best Moniker For Soy Bean

Teased by spotty rains, encouraged by cooler weather, Illinois farmers have twisted the old nursery rhyme into "Rain, rain, come again. Go away some other day." The experiment is bringing results in greater farmer optimism, reports the Illinois Agricultural Association.

In face of apprehension, the hardy, consistent soybean exhibits all the qualities of a camel. Thumbing its nose at chinch bugs, getting along famously, despite blasting heat and lack of rain, the performance of this major Illinois crop is bringing smiles to Illinois growers.

The staying qualities of the soybean plant parallel the performance of the bean in its most publicised field—paint. Possibly the same toughness found in the plant is handed on to the oil from the bean. Paint manufacturers are beginning to think so at least. Tests indicate that the combination of one-third refined soy oil and two-thirds high quality linseed oil in conjunction with lead, makes a tougher, longer lasting paint.

Where the farmer profits from such a discovery is that in recent years much of the linseed oil used in paint has been made from imported flaxseed. Reducing imports by one-third makes a pretty nice market for soybean growers to shoot at.

New Cushion Seats Installed in Star Theatre, Villa Grove

In keeping with the new improvement policies of the Star, they have just completed installation of new cushion seats this week.

Having just installed the world's greatest sound system a few days ago, they add new seats, which according to G. B. Barber, manager of the Star, is just a few of the new improvements.

Pension Aid Checks Going Out This Week

Springfield, Aug. 3—Checks averaging $12 each are being mailed this week to 6,577 old age pensioners in Illinois, State Auditor E. J. Barrett announced today. Payments to all of these persons, it was stated, are made on the basis of a $15 monthly maximum. Application has been made to the federal government, it was stated for $580,000 as Illinois' share of old age funds for July, August and September, but as yet no federal funds have arrived.

Relief Back Where It Belongs, Says IAA

With poor relief administration back in the laps of local taxing districts—effective July 1—greater economy and attention to who is and who is not entitled to relief is forecast by the Illinois Agricultural Association in the August issue of its official publication, the Record.

"On July 1, primary responsibility for poor relief and its administration in Illinois was placed back in the laps of local taxing districts. That's where it was originally, and that's where it belongs. Taxpayers, voters and local officials are more likely to insist on economy in expenditures of relief funds when they fully realize that the money is coming out of their own pockets. This is particularly true in rural communities where neighbors know neighbors and can judge as to who is worthy of relief and who isn't. They know who are willing workers and who are shirkers. In Evanston, for example, steps already are taken to permit and, if necessary, require able-bodied men on relief rolls, who were not taken over by PWA, to work for their living. Chicago and some downstate communities are considering a similar move.

Under the new relief program, competition among counties to get their share of state relief funds is substantially ended. Hundreds of townships downstate already have signified their intention of getting along as much as possible without state aid. A total of 530 out of 1,411 downstate townships did not apply for any state aid for July. The cost of administering relief should be cut substantially under the new plan. The high cost of administration in some communities will be abolished when township supervisors handle the situation, or voters will know the reason why.

He loved his garden, and whether he tended the white violets at his doorstep, the red rambler by the path, the orange lily bed, the mint by the garden fence, or the vegetables here and there, he received the reward of a nature lover, that of abundant crops.

John Warden Dies at Long View Friday

Longview.—John Warden died at 7 p. m., Friday at his home here following a lingering illness of 12 months, due to complications.

Funeral services were held at 2 p. m., Sunday, from the United Brethren Church, with Rev. J. F. Turner officiating. Interment was in Fairfield cemetery.

The following obituary was prepared by Mrs. E. E. Fansler, of Longview:

John Warden, the third child of a family of five, was born to Daniel and Sarah Warden, near Londonday, Moneymore county, Ireland, on October 11, 1860. He departed this life July 31, 1936, aged seventy-five years, nine months and twenty days.

The people of that part of Ireland were of Scotch descent and religiously were Presbyterians, but a wealthy Englishman had large holdings in this particular locality. He caused the English Episcopal church to be established there and supported it with his own money. At the age of sixteen John Warden was baptized into this church.

In 1883 he came to the United States to the city of Chicago. There he worked at the stock yards for years. In 1895 he returned to Ireland for a visit.

On May 18, 1897 he was married to Lillie A. Dilworth of Longview, Ill. No children were born to this union, but a sister, Maria Warden Pelling, had died, leaving two boys, Earl and Irving. Irving was only two years of age when he was received into this home, where he grew to manhood, loved and cared for as a son.

Mrs. Warden passed away August 14, 1914.

During the intervening years Mr. Warden spent six of them on the farm near Frankfort, Ind., where his foster son resided.

In 1930 he came to Longview where he bought a home and lived alone until his death. This was an unusual procedure for one of his age, but he seemed happy and radiated happiness 'round about him. With a little Spitz dog as his companion, he was a familiar figure every morning in his trip to the Post Office.

He considered it a great duty and a wonderful privilege to read his Bible comprehensively and his discussions of it excited the utmost respect and admiration of his listeners.

He was very thrifty, honest in all his dealings with his fellow men, and most charitable in judgment of his friends and neighbors. He was one of the charter members of Independent Order of Odd Fellows in Chicago and he measured up to the laws of his lodge.

He loved his garden, and whether he tended the white violets at his doorstep, the red rambler by the path, the orange lily bed, the mint by the garden fence, or the vegetables here and there, he received the reward of a nature lover, that of abundant crops.

It seems fitting to remark on the fact that four families came to the state and this community from northern Ireland, the Wardens, Carletons, Dilworths and the Wilsons. They were bound together by ties of a common birth-place, some were bound by blood ties, and later by marriage. ing of one of their number. One brother, Charles Warden and his wife, of Chicago survive. Four cousins, James A. Carleton of Longview; Wilson Carleton and Mrs. Anna McKendry, both of Chicago; Matthew Carleton who remained in Ireland; the foster son, Irving Pelling, wife and son of Frankfort, Ind.; and Earl Pelling who resides in Michigan, live to mourn the loss of a worthy father and uncle.

The Value of Travel

During the vacation season many thousands of persons will visit various interesting places for the first time, some in our own country and others abroad. While recreation will be the principal aim of many, a majority will expect to learn something of permanent value during their travels.

In order that one may derive the most benefit from his travel experiences, it would be well to find out as much as possible about the places to be visited ahead of time. Then, when he actually sees the places and objects of which he has studied, he will gain a more lasting impression of their significance.

Information gained from the guides and handbooks during one's travels is valuable, of course, but it is generally superficial, and lacking in the historic background which is necessary for a full understanding and appreciation of the famous places where history has been made.

The educational value of travel depends largely upon knowing beforehand what one wants to see, and why.

The Pardoning Board

In Texas an amendment to the state constitution is proposed which would relieve the governor from the responsibility of passing on applications for pardon or parole. The pardoning power would be vested in a state board, which would take that responsibility.

The Selma Alabama Times-Journal believes such a change would be in order in other states as well as in Texas, and gives some convincing reasons for its opinion, including the following:

The granting or refusing of pardons and commutations of punishments imposes a distressing burden on a governor and it is an ordeal he should not be required to endure.

A board of competent men would not feel the same nervous strain and rasing responsibility that a governor must suffer when the fate of the unfortunate is placed entirely in his hands.

It would be a good public policy to relieve the governor of such harrowing experiences and influences in dealing with these important matters.

Dogs For The Blind

A most interesting and worthy institution is known as the Seeing Eye, at Morristown, N. J., where dogs are trained to act as guides and companions for the blind. Some 220 blind persons now own dogs which have been trained there and the number is steadily increased.

It is not only necessary to train the dogs, but their prospective owners must also be taught how to use them, which takes a month of study and practice under the supervision of instructors at Morristown.

Care is taken to avoid allowing the dogs to fall into the hands of any but persons who will show them affection and appreciation. In fact, good treatment of the animals is necessary in order to obtain satisfactory results from their use.

The Seeing Eye is supported largely by philanthropic persons who are also devoted to the wonderful dogs which perform such a valuable service for those so afflicted. While one of these dogs may be obtained for $150, it is said that the cost to the institution is about $900. Instructors at the Seeing Eye are highly expert in their line, and each can train about 20 dogs in a year.

Diesel Locomotives

Much progress in the development of Diesel locomotives has been made in the last few years, and a new plant for their manufacture put into operation at La Grange, Ill., by General Motors last spring promises to profoundly affect rail transportation.

The new locomotives being manufactured there are based on the two-cycle Diesel engine, first demonstrated publicly at the Century of Progress exposition in Chicago. The first engine was of only 600 horsepower, but those of 3,600 horsepower have since been built and put into service.

Among the railroads for which the new Diesel locomotives have been built are the Santa Fe, the Baltimore & Ohio, and perhaps others. These locomotives are said to be entirely satisfactory and economical to operate.

Experiments with Diesel engines for automobiles have also been made, but none has been produced which approaches the gasoline engine for quick starting, pick-up, hill climbing and speed, besides the disagreeable odor of burning oil is objectionable.

So, while the Diesel locomotive appears to be here to stay, the gasoline engine for automobiles seems unlikely to be superseded for years to come, if ever.

If a Candidate Dies

The question is sometimes asked as to what would happen if a candidate for President should die between the time of his nomination and election day. The answer is that the national committee of the candidate's party is authorized to fill the vacancy. Or, it may call a national convention for that purpose.

In case of the death of a candidate for vice-president the same procedure would be followed. This has actually happened once in our history.

It was in 1912, when Vice-President James S. Sherman was a candidate for re-election with President Taft. Sherman died on October 30, only a few days before the election, and the Republican national committee designated Nicholas Murray Butler to fill the vacancy. Taft and Butler carried only two states—Vermont and Utah—on account of the split in the party caused by the nomination of Theodore Roosevelt on the Bull Moose ticket.

If the President-elect should die before inauguration day, the Vice-President-elect would become President.

Strictly speaking a President is not elected until the electors have cast their ballots, and electors are not legally bound to vote for the choice of their respective states, but they are morally bound to do so. No elector has ever failed to fulfill that obligation.

Flattery, to be effective, should be used sparingly. This also applies to other kinds of lying.

Uncle Sam is against any further taking of territory by force. Since we got what the Indians had.

If present immigration laws had been in force earlier, few of our ancestors would have gotten in.

Some 60,000 crippled children have received aid from the Shriners during the last 14 years each Shriner making an annual contribution for the purpose. The order now has 12 hospitals in the United States and three in Canada.

During the recent observance of Railroad Week, a committee in Walla Walla, Wash., proposed a handcar race between two section crews but the race could not be staged. No old-fashioned handcar could be found, as only motor cars have been used by section hands for many years.

CORN Contributes To Many Dishes

HOT stewed corn is such a good dish all by itself that some housewives continue to serve it year after year, and fail to realize that corn can be combined with many other ingredients in dishes that add desirable variety to the menu and taste equally good. Try it, as an ingredient, in one of the following dishes and you'll soon find yourself inventing other combinations.

Corn and Rice Fritters: Beat four egg yolks well and add one cup creamy canned corn and one-half cup boiled rice. Add one-fourth cup milk and then one and two-thirds cups flour, one teaspoon salt and two teaspoons baking powder sifted together. Fold in four stiffly-beaten egg whites. Drop by spoonfuls into hot deep fat—375 degrees—and fry until a rich brown. Serve at once with maple syrup. Makes about two dozen fritters.

This Tastes Like More

Baked Spaghetti with Corn and Lima Beans: Combine four cups cooked spaghetti with one cup canned creamy corn and one cup canned lima beans. Add two cups milk to three slightly-beaten eggs, add one and a half teaspoons salt and one-fourth cup chopped parsley, and pour over. Sprinkle with one-fourth cup grated cheese and bake about thirty minutes in a moderate oven. Serves eight.*

THE jury filed in. A paper was passed, and the clerk rose to read: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of manslaughter."

Manslaughter! The spectators leaned back with a sigh. The venerable judge cleared his throat and asked the prisoner to rise.

Dan Kilrairie knew that he hated Nate Rankin, but the jury's decision gave him an odd shock. Through the dramatic days of the trial he had waited for the conviction of the tall mountaineer, whose gaze had met his own eyes at infrequent intervals. Dan was sure that there had been a secret humor in those clear eyes, but if Rankin knew, why didn't the man speak out?

His hand faintly trembled as he rubbed the soreness which was so continuous in his eyeballs this last year. Something inside him urged him to act—act now. But again that insidious fear held him in its paralyzing grip. And then, if Nate Rankin went to prison there would be no one to prevent his marriage to Cynthia.

Rankin's objection to the marriage had been based on an old family feud. Dan and Cynthia had been more than willing to forget this feud of their ancestors, but the father remained adamant. And for this reason Dan hated him.

The judge was speaking: "Nate Rankin," His Honor spoke slowly, "the jury has found you guilty of manslaughter. This decision imposes a mandate of punishment. There is no need to defer the pronouncement of sentence. Have you anything to say?"

Dan waited breathlessly for the prisoner to speak.

Only one other man had Dan Kilrairie ever hated. Martin Whitehead, the dead gambler, Whitehead had shot down Dan's father in cold blood when the boy was only five. Dan had never forgotten, and when he heard that the gambler had been making insinuating remarks about Cynthia Rankin to the hangers-on in his saloon, the hate flamed into a definite resolve.

And now Whitehead was dead, and Nate Rankin convicted of his murder. The evidence had been purely circumstantial. The prisoner had been heard to threaten the dead man on the day of the murder and had later been caught near the body, but no gun had been found. He had admitted owning a pistol of the same caliber which fired the fatal shot, but he claimed it had disappeared. He would say nothing further except that he was not guilty.

Rankin now stood silent. "Very well," the judge's voice droned on, "I therefore sentence you—"

Something exploded in Dan Kilrairie's head. He was on his feet. "Wait! Wait!" He realized this screaming voice was his own.

"Rankin is not guilty, Yo' Honah," he shouted. "I am the one. I killed Martin Whitehead!"

He almost ran down the aisle to the little inclosure. The entire room held the stillness of death. Dan's hand reached under his armpit and drew out a large old-fashioned revolver. This he slid over the table to the prosecuting attorney, whose usually cynical face was a picture of blank astonishment.

"That gun killed Whitehead," Dan's voice was now low but clear. "Hit belonged to my father. Whitehead murdered him seventeen years ago. I nevah fo'got, so, when I was told he was talkin', I shot and killed him—"

Suddenly exhausted, Dan's head dropped to his breast. He failed to hear the pandemonium which broke the silence in the crowded courtroom, or the banging of the judge's gavel. How long he remained so he didn't know, but order was restored and a clear voice finally penetrated his consciousness.

"If Yo' Honah please," Nate Rankin was speaking in his rich mountain drawl, "I do hev somethin' to say and would like right well to say lit now."

He turned to the courtroom. "Cynthia, come heah," his voice was soft but commanding.

A girl of perhaps twenty, dressed in the homely garments of the hill people, rose and came forward. She walked with the springy lightness of open spaces, and the face under the long hair was exceptionally pretty.

The tall man pointed to the prosecutor. "Give Mr. Jackson, theah, my gun," he instructed the girl. She blushed, but stooped quickly and drew from under her skirt a big .44 revolver, strikingly similar to the one Dan had shoved across the table a few minutes before. She handed it to the now helplessly amazed prosecuting attorney.

"That is the reason the sheriff couldn't find my gun," Rankin explained with an apologetic smile. "Cynthia has worn hit next her body evah since the night I killed Whitehead. I killed him fo' good cause and that is the reason I pleaded not guilty."

He paused and looked at Dan quizzically. "I always kill my own hogs, Dan." Then he smiled at the young man stared back, fascinated. "Dan," he said, "yo're a fine man, even if you are a Kilrairie. I guess Cynthia can make out with yuh, all right."

Rankin turned to face the old judge: "Theah was only one chunk of lead in Whitehead. Yo' honah." He spoke deliberately. "Dan missed; his eyes ain't so good lately. I was only ten yehds away, and I can hit a dime plumb centah at fifty feet. We both fired in the same instant, Suh."

Career

MADAME, yawning behind a fat and shapely hand, thought that never had she had a pupil with such lack of feeling as little Jacqueline Prescott. Yet somehow she must make a singer out of the child because Mamma Prescott counted on it so.

Today Jacqueline seemed worse than usual. Possibly Pixie Dumont, who accompanied Madame's embryo musical prodigies was partly to blame, for, though Pixie had technique at the tips of her long fingers, there was no music in her soul.

To Pixie, in her own words, Jacqueline was so much pickled tripe.

Madame said, "Next month you shall have your chance on the stage, Jacqueline. You shall show what you can do."

Jacqueline's little pansy face blanched. "No, no," she pleaded. "I don't want to sing before a whole lot of people. I am not ready."

"She'll never be a singer," ventured Pixie, after the girl had gone, her mass of blond curls framing her face like a golden nimbus, her fur coat fastened snugly over her throat to protect the precious vocal chords.

Madame shrugged her shoulders. "Sometimes you are tiresome, dearie," said she. "Her poppa was the great tenor. She has the voice. She needs the grand passion. It will come. She is young. You are jealous, Pixie. Why don't you like Jacqueline?"

Two days later, when Jacqueline came for her lesson, the star pupil was thanking God for a garden with all the fervor of a religious fanatic. Jacqueline sat down to listen raptly behind the velvet portieres. When the star pupil launched into "The Rosary," Jacqueline's inner self reverently kissed the cross with him, and promised eternal devotion, to what she neither knew nor cared.

When her turn came, she faced Madame with a new light in her eyes. Madame sensed a change.

Pixie lightly began a butterfly lyric, and the girl trilled it through. The star pupil, sorting his music in the outer studio, peered from behind the draperies suddenly, and smiled at her. Jacqueline's voice soared clear as a crystal spirit. The notes of her "Ave Maria" died into a breathless sob, and the girl sank into a chair and buried her face in her hands. Madame's shaking hands caressed the gleam of her fair hair.

"Hm," she murmured. "Has somebody been kissing into you a soul, my little Jacqueline? You have found the grand passion. I must call your mamma."

"No, no," cried Jacqueline. "Don't! I can't sing, I tell you. I don't know what happened to me just now." And she fastened up her coat and left silently, like a spent wraith of herself who had no more to give.

"Humph," grunted Pixie. "She wanted to show off before Phillip Wendell. That's her way of making him notice her. He's never looked at a woman before. All he sees is music. All he hears. And if she wants him she'll get him, I suppose."

Had Pixie followed them three nights before Madame's big stage presentation, she would have found them outside the Prescott pretentious front gate holding hands. It was a tense moment, and precious forever in the heart of Jacqueline.

"I can't go through with it," she whispered to him.

"Then don't," he begged. "I sail for Italy tomorrow. You know that. Come with me. Marry me, Jacqueline, and come with me."

The future loomed bright with happiness. But then she thought of Madame's eyes. She shook her head, even as Phillip drew her closer. "I couldn't," said she. "I'm on the program. Madame counts on me to make good. Just a little matter of honor, you know."

"I'm proud of you," whispered Phillip Wendell. "I only wish that I could stay to hear you. You see, I'm counting on you, too. But, remember this. Wherever I am, I shall always be with you in spirit if not in person, listening. And when the performance is over, you shall come to me in Italy."

It was very final. Phillip left on the Conte di Raconti, and Jacqueline prepared to face the footlights.

Two hours before the performance the news of the sinking of the Conte di Raconti came over the radio. Fire at sea. Flames of terror searing cold hearts. Valor through pandemonium where it was needed most. Names enrolled forevermore on the lists of brave men. Among them was Phillip Wendell, who was among the martyred dead.

Jacqueline faced the footlights and the sea of faces before her with a heart whose ache had frozen within her. There was a hush pregnant with the sympathy of thousands who knew.

"Are you listening, Phillip?" begged Jacqueline's heart. "Because I am singing to you."

And she sang as she had never sung before.

She slipped away from the shattering applause, past her mother's glittering, outstretched hands and Madame's tear-dimmed eyes, into her dressing room.

"You will make the name of Prescott famous," applauded her mother, trailing after her.

Jacqueline's voice was hard, brittle, as if about to break.

"If there's any name that will be made famous, it will be Wendell," she said. "Phillip and I were married before he sailed."

Brown Bread

Bully Desserts

HERE'S a short cut to making two bully desserts which will not only vary your menus, but make your family sit up and ask for more. The first of these is Quick Steamed Pudding with Creamy Hard Sauce: Steam one pound can brown bread with raisins, remove from can and slice in eight slices. Serve with sauce made as follows: Cream one-half cup butter, add slowly one and one-half cups confectioner's sugar and continue creaming until light and fluffy. Add a few grains salt, one-eighth teaspoon almond flavoring and either one-half cup cream, beaten, or one beaten egg white. Serves eight.

A Boston Bon Gout

Boston Torte with Sauce Supreme: Steam one pound can brown bread with raisins as usual, and break into pieces the size of a small walnut, using a fork. Pile into parfait glasses and pour over the following sauce: Combine one cup sugar, one-third cup water, a few grains salt and a few grains cream of tartar and boil to 236 degrees or the thread stage. Pour the syrup slowly over two well-beaten egg yolks, and beat with a Dover egg beater until very creamy. Add a few grains nutmeg and one-half teaspoon vanilla. Just before serving fold in one cup cream, beaten. Serves eight.*

Fewer Aches and Pains More Health and Pleasure

PAIN drags you down—physically, mentally, morally.

Why continue to endure it? Try Dr. Miles Anti-Pain Pills for Headache, Neuralgia, Muscular, Rheumatic, Sciatic, and Periodic Pains. They seldom fail.

Dr. Miles Anti-Pain Pills are pleasant to take and prompt to act. They do not upset the stomach, cause constipation or leave you with a dull, depressed feeling.

Ask your druggist or any of the hundreds of thousands enthusiastic users. Probably you too can find relief.

I think all Dr. Miles medicines are wonderful, but Anti-Pain Pills are my favorite.

Mrs. Doc Blankenship, Stamford, Texas I have used your Anti-Pain Pills only a short time, but they have given me prompt relief. They did for me in a week more than any other medicine I had taken for a year. Phil Goller, Milwaukee, Wisconsin

I am never without Anti-Pain Pills. I think they are much better than anything else I have ever used. Sometimes when I am tired and nervous, and feel like I would go under, I take two Anti-Pain Pills and in a short time I feel like a different person. Mrs. S. Tidabach, Stroudsburg, Pennsylvania

Your Anti-Pain Pills have been used in my home with wonderful results. I recommend them.

Maggie Belle Dudley, Vanceboro, N. C. Your Anti-Pain Pills helped me a great deal. I have used them for years. I carry them everywhere in my purse and always keep them in the house. They have saved me a great many sick headaches.

KICKING TEDDY UP-HILL

IT IS certain that Theodore Roosevelt would never have become President in the manner he did if it hadn't been for Sen. Thomas Platt, then the political boss of New York state. In order to insure the presence of a Republican at Albany, but with inner misgivings which were soon to be realized, he prevailed on the popular Rough Rider to become the gubernatorial candidate, shortly after the Spanish war.

Roosevelt was elected and showed immediately that he could not be controlled by Platt or any boss. Platt's embarrassment was only that of a politician. But the discomfort of his friends, thoroughly disturbed by Teddy's big stick gestures, became a problem.

The solution, finally arrived at by a devious route, appeared before the primaries of 1900. The Republican party in New York was to name a candidate for governor—perhaps Roosevelt again—in September. But the Republican party in the United States had to name a running mate for President McKinley, and the latter convention would be held in June!

Platt decided that Teddy would be the vice-presidential candidate. He would kick Roosevelt up-hill, and out of New York state.

Roosevelt himself realized the move had been launched to shelve him, for so he regarded the vice-presidency. Moreover, neither Mark Hanna of Ohio, a president-maker in a big way in those days, nor McKinley wanted Roosevelt on the national ticket.

But Platt persisted. He was aided by Roosevelt's growing popularity, particularly in the West.

These Westerners carried their Roosevelt enthusiasm to the convention with them. The boom reached proportions that Hanna could not ignore and in a conference with Platt the night before the nominations the president-maker capitulated.

Hanna issued a statement advocating Roosevelt for the vice-presidency and told the newspapermen: "Boys, you can't stop it any more than you could stop Niagara."

Soon to become President at the unfortunate death of McKinley, Roosevelt won the election. And when the gleeful Senator Platt was asked if he would attend the inauguration he replied: "Yes, I am going down to see Theodore Roosevelt take the veil."
