Lightning Strikes Barn; It Burns

Lightning struck the barn on the Mrs. J. H. Seider farm, 2 1/2 miles north of Broadlands, last Sunday morning at about 12:30 o'clock, during the rain, wind and electrical storm.

The building and all its contents were destroyed, which included 15 tons of clover hay and straw, corn dump, harness, etc. Two small calves which had been placed in the barn for the night were thought to have perished in the flames, but fortunately such was not the case, as both were found in the pasture on Monday morning. The barn was insured. The fire siren was sounded and quite a number of our citizens motored to the scene of the conflagration.

Limbs were torn from trees and a few small outbuildings were blown over by the wind. The only damage of any consequence reported in this locality was the fire which destroyed the barn at the farm home of Mrs. J. H. Seider, 2 1/2 miles north of town.

Press and Health

Newspapers of the country are performing a splendid public service through the publication of health information, according to Dr. Bloodgood, eminent scientist and cancer specialist of Johns Hopkins University.

He declares that because of the spread of sound advice 70 per cent of persons threatened with cancer now seek medical aid as soon as symptoms appear. Before the newspapers began to aid in disseminating information, less than three per cent sought medical aid in time.

The old notion that a doctor should not give information to the press, because of an ancient and foolish code of ethics, was criticised by Dr. Bloodgood, who believes that the public should be told in plain language whatever the doctor has to tell. Referring to the importance of giving attention to the teeth, he said:

"Let the press continue its work. Let it advise every man and woman over 40 to have their teeth X-rayed twice a year. Bad teeth are the most common causes of breakdown."

Through preventive measures the span of human life has been greatly lengthened in recent years, and it should be gratifying to newspaper men to have had an important part in bringing about this highly important result.

Machines and Jobs

How is your job affected by machinery? asks a dispatch from Dayton, Ohio, printed recently in the New York Times. The answer, it suggests, should be based on the cold practical fact of what is occurring.

From 1900 to 1930, says the dispatch, when we had more new machinery than at any time in our history, there was a gain of 20,000,000 new jobs.

During the last fifty years, the population of the United States increased about 200 per cent while jobs have increased about 300 per cent. That does not look as if we were going in the wrong direction. One-seventh of everybody working today is making some product unknown fifty years ago. Eighteen of our biggest industries have been created by machinery and invention since 1880. One out of every four persons today owes his employment to one of these eighteen new industries produced by invention and engineering, says H. A. Toulmin, Jr., of the patent section of the American Bar Association.

Occupations that have gone out of vogue have lost 800,000 jobs. The new business created by inventions have given more than 2,250,000 jobs. The balance is undoubtedly on the right side of the ledger in favor of invention and engineering.

The Hardy Dog Tick
 Scientists of the Department of Agriculture have been making an extensive study of the life and habits of the common dog tick, and have found it to be one of the toughest of living creatures.

By way of illustration, it is declared that the tick can live as long as three years without a particle of food or drink, and that freezing fails to kill it. The tick is known to be the means of spreading Rocky Mountain spotted fever, which in recent years has been carried to a number of Eastern states.

The government scientists are studying the tick with a view to developing improved means for its eradication, which would aid in the control of spotted fever infection.

Sidelights

John Kaczmarek of Chicago started for a ride on a "scooter" powered with a gasoline motor, without learning how to stop the thing. He hung on until he crashed against the side of a building, and had to be sent to a hospital by police. He declares he will try it again as soon as he is able to take a lesson on stopping.

Word comes from Waukon, Ia. that the 50 cents bounty on rattlesnakes will not be paid in the future unless four inches of each snake's tail is presented to local supervisors. Formerly bounties were paid upon presentation of rattles only, and some farmers are said to have raised snakes as a business, obtaining several sets of rattles from the same snake.

Carelessness on the part of a little daughter of Ambrus Selle of Ujpest, Hungary, raised her family from poverty to comfortable circumstances. She broke a large vase brought from America by an uncle now deceased, and under a false bottom a large amount of jewels and gold was found.

Dr. R. A. Smith of Brewton, Ala., admits that he is set in his ways and never expects to have his beard shaved. He recently told Editor Brooks of the Standard: "I am about my beard as I am about my politics—I never change. I have been a Democrat ever since I first voted at the age of 16, and I'll never be anything else."

Interesting Notes

Max Drogel of Dresden caught Heinrich Gerin eloping with his daughter and kept him prisoner in a large ice-box for two days.

Mrs. Clara Watkins of St. Paul testified in her divorce suit that her husband frequently bombarded her with eggs.

Physicians at Washington, Ind., successfully grafted 125 square inches of skin on the legs of Oscar Rittersnap, who was burned in an explosion.

Mrs. Mary Loxen of Belfast admitted she had thrown hot ashes on her husband when he refused to get up in the morning.

When Victor Torok's will was filed for probate at Davenport, Ia., it was discovered that he had provided $10 for each pall-bearer at his funeral.

Mrs. Harriet Cokely of New York directed in her will that her relatives should receive "nothing but a bag of sand to rub themselves with."

Dentist W. F. Taylor of Prophetstown, Ill., is boasting to friends that he "never felt a thing" when he extracted an impacted wisdom tooth from his own jaw.

The trial of a Negro charged with larceny was postponed several days in Upper Marlboro, Md., because Thomas King, defense attorney, was entered in a bridge tournament.

When the tooth of a patient came out after a mighty yank, Dr. L. D. Starier, a dentist of Evanston, Ill., lost his balance and fell out the window, breaking an arm.

Nerves → Do they torture you by day? Keep you awake at night?

What is it that keeps hospitals open and doctors busy? NERVES.
What is it that makes your face wrinkled and makes you feel old? NERVES.
Nine times out of ten it's NERVES that make you restless, worried, haggard.

Nerves → Do they make you Cranky, Blue--give you Nervous Indigestion, Nervous Headache?

When nerves are over-taxed, you worry over trifles, find it hard to concentrate, can't sit still. Nerve Strain brings on Headache. Nervous people often suffer from Indigestion. There may be absolutely nothing wrong with the organs of digestion, but the Nerves are not on the job to make the organs do their work properly.

Nerves → Do they interfere with your work; ruin your pleasure; drive away your friends?

You're cheating yourself and the man who pays you if you work when your NERVES are not normal. You can't have a good time when you are nervous. You can't make or keep friends when you are keyed up and irritable. You may excuse yourself, but to others you are just a plain crank.

The Will

WNU Service.

BOB HARRIS sat apart from the others in the room. He, with five relatives, had come to the home of his late uncle, Silas Wharton, to hear the reading of the deceased's will.

Bob was a social outcast where his relatives were concerned, and they made that fact very plain by having as little to do with him as possible. After several attempts to start a conversation, in which the answers to his questions were mere nods of the head, or yes and no, he left the others alone and entertained himself with his own thoughts. His uncle's attorney would be in soon to read the will.

There was a sudden stillness as a door opened and Alec Loring, the attorney, walked in, accompanied by the secretary of the late Silas Wharton. Loring impressed the occupants of the room with his important air as he spoke to each of them, then walked to a table in the center of the room and deposited his brief case.

The secretary seated himself by Loring and bestowed upon the others the smug smile that Bob had long before come to hate when he had lived there with his uncle. Bob had learned to judge character pretty well, and he had often wondered how his uncle had come to hire Jackson.

The attorney raised his hand to command silence and said, "Friends, I have called you here today to hear the reading of the will of our late friend and relative, Silas Wharton. I am sure you are not interested in the preliminaries, so I shall dispense with them. Listen carefully: 'First, to Ella Norton, my niece, I bequeath the sum of one thousand dollars; second, to my cousins, John, Fred and Henry Morgan, I bequeath the sum of five hundred dollars each; third, to my nephew, Jed Norton, who has shown plainly that he had designs on my money, I bequeath the sum of one dollar; fourth, to my nephew, Bob Harris, who was ungrateful for all I did for him, and who left me in my time of greatest need, I bequeath one dollar; fifth, to my respected friend and secretary, Paul Jackson, because of his loyalty and obedience, I bequeath the balance of my fortune—'

There was a gasp of amazement from the heirs. They hadn't expected a great deal of Silas' fortune, for he had been mean and miserly and had told them more than once they need not expect much, if anything. They had concluded that he intended leaving most of it to Bob, thus their enmity toward him. But now he, too, had been left out in the cold and they gloated inwardly. Still, they had a new object for their hatred now—the secretary who would inherit so much. Silas was reputed to have had half a million dollars.

Bob, who had been sitting in silence for a few moments now rose and advanced to the table where the lawyer was returning papers to his brief case. "Mind if I look at the will, Loring?" he asked.

"Why, of course not," was the answer as the lawyer handed the will to him. "Thinking of contesting it, son?" he asked.

Bob did not reply, but busied himself with re-reading the legal paper. The others were preparing to leave. Suddenly they were halted by a surprised gasp from Bob. He started to return the will to Loring, but hesitated and said: "Where is the original will, Loring?"

The lawyer looked up in surprise and answered, "Why, you have it there in your hand. There was only one made."

"No doubt there was only one made by my uncle," Bob said, "but this isn't it. This will was forged!"

Rage flooded the lawyer's face and he made as if to strike at his accuser, but the expression in Bob's eyes halted him. "Young man," he said, "that's a bold statement; you don't know what you're saying. I demand—"

Bob said coldly, "That will was forged, and I'm accusing you and Jackson of conspiring to defraud us out of what is rightfully ours."

Jackson's voice was shrill. "You young squirt, just because you were the old man's pet I guess you're sore because you didn't get everything. Well, listen, you tore down your own playhouse when you left him. He told you as much."

Bob shoved him backwards and he fell into his chair. "I know Uncle Silas was mad because I left, but I was tired of being eternally bossed; I was old enough to know how to take care of myself. You probably don't know that he wrote me after I left, trying to get me to come back; he told me he had left me most of his fortune in his will and that's one reason why I suspected that this wasn't the original one, for, whatever Uncle Silas was, he certainly never lied to me. He made his will right after I left, two years ago. Now listen—while I was in the north I worked in a paper mill. Everyone knows that all writing paper is watermarked. I recognized the paper on which this will is written, as being a brand that was manufactured at our mill. Look carefully. This will is dated March 3, 1932. It could be nothing but a forgery, for we didn't start manufacturing this particular brand of paper until April, 1933!"

MODERN MIXED VEGETABLES

PERHAPS you like to parboil in the kitchen preparing vegetables for cooking. Most people don't, and there is a good modern way to avoid all this work. The way is simply to use mixed vegetables in cans. Then all the work of preparation has been done for you much more thoroughly than you could do it, and you can go straight to your cooking. And what a variety of combinations you can make with these mixed vegetables in cans! Curries, cutlets, jellies, stuffed peppers, even pies. These recipes prove it.

Casserole of Curried Rice and Vegetables: Sauté one minced onion in one-third cup butter until tender but not brown. Add one and a half teaspoons curry powder, one teaspoon celery seed and one teaspoon salt, and stir smooth. Add one cup boiling water, and cook a few minutes longer. Pour this over three cups hot cooked rice and toss lightly together until well mixed. Line bottom and sides of a buttered casserole with the rice and fill center with the drained contents of a No. 2 can of mixed vegetables. Cover with rice, dot with two tablespoons butter, and bake in a hot oven for about thirty minutes. Makes eight servings.

Cutlets and Jelly
Vegetable Cutlets: Make a thick white sauce of two tablespoons butter, four tablespoons flour and one cup milk, and season highly with salt and pepper. Add the well-drained contents of a No. 2 can of mixed vegetables and spread out on a buttered plate to cool and stiffen. Then take up heaping tablespoonfuls of mixture and shape into cutlets (or croquettes, if desired). Roll in fine crumbs, then in one well-beaten egg, and again in crumbs. Fry in deep fat—390 degrees—until brown. Makes about twelve cutlets or croquettes. Serves six.

Vegetables in Tomato Jelly: Soften two tablespoons gelatin in one-half cup water, and dissolve in two and a half cups boiling canned tomato juice. Add four tablespoons sugar, four tablespoons vinegar, four tablespoons lemon juice and one teaspoon salt. Cool and let thicken to consistency of honey. Add the drained mixed vegetables from a No. 2 can, pour into wet individual molds, and let harden in refrigerator. When ready to serve, turn out into nests of crisp lettuce. Serve with a dressing made by whipping one-half cup cream and beating into it one-half cup French dressing. Makes eight to ten servings.

Stuffed Peppers and Pie
Baked Stuffed Peppers: Cut off stem ends of six or eight medium green peppers, and remove seeds and membranes. Parboil for two or three minutes in boiling water, then drain. Combine contents of a No. 2 can mixed vegetables with one cup white sauce, season well, and fill peppers with mixture. Top with buttered crumbs. (If desired, a square of sliced cheese may be placed on each pepper.) Place close together in a shallow pan and surround with a little hot water. Bake until tender and browned or about thirty minutes. Makes six to eight servings.*

What's a ROORBACK?

Yes, many of us know that it's a political campaign falsehood used to advantage by an opposition party. But just when did the "roorback" start, and where did it get its name? You can trace the origin of many such political terms in a new series of historical articles to appear in this paper...
