

Messman Reunion Held at Sadorus

Two hundred seventy-five members and guests of the Messman family met Sunday in the Mevis grove, south of Sadorus, for their fourth annual reunion.

C. F. Messman of Broadlands, 86, was the oldest person present, while the four months' old baby of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Deedrich of Sadorus, was the youngest. Earl A. Holl of Washington, D. C., came the greatest distance.

Elmer Messman of Homer was re-elected as president; Walter Schroeder, Sadorus, re-elected vice-president; and Miss Zelma Hall, Champaign, was re-elected secretary-treasurer.

The committee chairmen of this year will serve in the same capacity for the reunion of 1937. They are: Mrs. H. T. Oye, Galton, food; Walter Messman, Sadorus, entertainment; Louis and Jessie Strack, Sadorus, grounds; C. W. Schultz, Pesotum, music.

Members were present from numerous towns in Illinois, also Woodburn and Ft. Wayne, Ind., St. Louis, Mo., and Washington, D. C.

The News is $1.50 a year.

"The Man Who-o-o"

BALLOTS OF HATE

THE presence this year of a nationally known newspaper publisher on the ticket of a major political party has excited interest in the part newspaper men have taken as candidates in the past.

One of them who was very active was Horace Greeley of New York Tribune fame, a candidate of the "Liberal Republicans" and endorsed by the Democrats to oppose the reelection of Grant in 1872.

Greeley was made a presidential candidate by a reform group of Republicans which had found its nucleus in Missouri with the election of one of its leaders as governor and later held a national convention at Cincinnati.

The Cincinnati convention expected its candidate and platform to be accepted by the Democratic organization, sadly broken up by the disenfranchisement of southerners in the wake of the Civil war. So everyone was amazed when Greeley was named presidential candidate.

During the war, Greeley, a chronic sufferer from nervous disorders, had been erratic in his editorial positions, shifted them frequently—always with the belief that he was expressing what most people wanted.

While the South was still under arms, he had declared with great passion that the war should not end while slavery existed, yet petitioned Lincoln to appoint him commissioner to arrange a peace.

The result of all this was that he was threatened throughout the South and thoroughly hated there. Yet after the war he signed the ball bond of Jefferson Davis.

When the Democrats met at Baltimore a little more than two months after Greeley's nomination they adopted the Greeley ticket because they felt it their only means of opposing Grant.

A small group, it is true, broke away from the main body of Democrats, held a second convention in September at Louisville and placed a third ticket in the field.

Grant didn't fuss around with the election. He won overwhelmingly. It was the first time since the Civil war that all the states voted and Grant carried all but six of them, getting 272 electoral votes.

The states Grant didn't win—Missouri, Maryland, Georgia, Kentucky, Tennessee and Texas, were fairly representative of the territory which hated Greeley. But Greeley died before the results were known. These states would have given him 66 votes had he lived.

Barn Dance Stars at Sports Festival

WLS Barn Dance Stars, including Otto and his Novelodons, Ramblin' Red Foley, Sophia Germanich, and Pat Buttram will be featured in a free entertainment at the first annual Illinois Musical and Folk Dance Festival to be held in the stadium at the University of Illinois, Urbana, Sept. 4.

Following the barn dance show, square dance and quadrille teams and instrumental and vocal acts from more than 75 counties will compete for state honors.

Using a transmitter truck to cover the athletic fields, WLS will broadcast some of the farm sports activities on Friday, from 12 to 12:30 p. m., CST, and Saturday, from 1:15 to 2:00 p. m., CST. The Farm Bureau bands of Logan and Boone counties and the 4-H Club band of Sangamon county have been invited to take part in the WLS broadcasts from Urbana.

A new farm radio will be given by WLS to the farm family of four or more that travels the longest distance to attend the festival and to the largest farm family in attendance.

This two-day event, in which the county farm bureau, Illinois Agricultural Association, University of Illinois and Prairie Farmer WLS are cooperating, is the first statewide farm sports festival ever held in America.

Lightning Destroys 12 Room Sidney Farm House

Sidney, Aug. 28.—A 12 room partly modern farm house on the farm of the late Wm. Cole, four and one-half miles southwest of Sidney was struck by lightning and destroyed by fire early Friday morning. The farm is tenanted by Mr. and Mrs. Louis Wienke, Jr.

The dwelling was known as the homestead of the late Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Cole and was built 75 years ago.

The post office will be closed on Labor Day, Monday, Sept. 7. There will be no rural delivery.

Rain Bolsters Chance For Soybean Crop

After struggling through a dry summer, the tough little soybean is coming down the home stretch these rainy days with all leaves flying and plenty of pods in the hold. According to the Illinois Agricultural Association, the conviction is growing among farmers that soybeans have what it takes to stick it out thru a dry Illinois summer and still make a crop.

Repercussions are also felt along the same lines from industry. The many new uses for soybeans are enhanced when it is felt that even during drouth times there will be a soybean crop and a constant supply. The paint manufacturers, especially, are interested in that angle. If they are to change old formulas to include some oil from soybeans they want to feel that the soy oil supply is dependable and of good quality. On the other hand, Illinois farmers who benefit most by the use of a soyoil paint, will back the manufacturer by using this type of paint exclusively.

Local People on Motor Trips

Miss Anna Clem and Mrs. Lillie Bowman returned Monday from a ten days trip to Wisconsin.

Alfred Zenke and family and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wiese spent the past two weeks on a fishing trip at Garrison, Minn.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Witt and daughter, Lila Mae, returned Monday, after a week's visit at Vandalia, Ohio, and Chicago. Mr. Witt participated in the Grand American trapshoot at Vandalia.

Wayne Brewer returned Sunday from a 10 day motor trip to Kingsport, Red Boiling Springs and Nashville, Tenn. He also visited in the states of Indiana, Kentucky and Virginia. Three young men from neighboring towns accompanied him on the trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Zenke, Mrs. Norman Seider and son, and Miss Mahel Bahlow returned Wednesday from a trip through Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Iowa. They visited Rev. Bock and family at Peterson, Iowa. Mr. Zenke says they have fair crops through Wisconsin and Minnesota, but there are no crops in North and South Dakota.

Sell Remainder Assets of Broadlands Bank

Deputy Receiver W. J. Stapleton of Champaign sold all of the remaining assets of the First State Bank of Broadlands, at public auction at the bank building in Broadlands, on Wednesday morning of this week. The assets totaled approximately $40,000.00 and brought the sum of $265.00. Attorney Don Richmond of Champaign was the successful bidder. Mr. Richmond made the purchase for a Mr. Powell of Kenwood.

Depositors of the bank have received 30% to date. The last final dividend will be between 8 and 10%, so we have been informed. We are unable to learn just when this will be paid.

Light and Health

Electric lights of the future will be health-giving as well as light-giving, declares an engineering publication. It is well known that quartz mercury lamps which radiate the beneficial ultra-violet rays have been used by physicians for sometime. But these have required expert and careful handling.

Now, it appears, lamps giving off these healthful rays have been developed for use in general lighting, thus performing a double duty. In fact such lamps are already available, but so far their use has been restricted to home treatment of diseases in which sunlight or its equivalent is necessary.

When the new lamps are adopted for general use, as it is believed they eventually will be, it is expected that they will be of immense benefit, especially to indoor workers who have little contact with the health-giving rays of natural sunlight.

Running Into Trains

Don Quixote's tilting at windmills was hardly less foolish and much less disastrous than the habit of present day motorists who assault railroad trains.

Figures covering accidents at railroad crossings during a period of six months show that in 27 per cent of the cases the automobiles ran into trains, instead of trains running into automobiles.

One railroad company reports that in a single year 500 of its crossing gates lowered to protect the public were run into and smashed by motorists. Another company checked the performance of 3,589 drivers while crossing its tracks. By actual observation it was found that of this number 2,907 failed to look either to the right or left before crossing. 602 looked in one direction only, while 80 drivers looked both ways.

With such evidence of recklessness on the part of motorists before us, it is not difficult to understand why some 36,000 persons are killed and more than a million injured in automobile accidents every year.

Students' Boners

Two volumes of amusing "boners," compiled by Alexander Abingdon from students' examination papers, have been published recently. A few samples follow:

Acrimony, sometimes called holy, is another name for marriage.

The government of England is a limited mockery.

In Christianity a man can have only one wife. This is called monotony.

Jacob, son of Isaac, stole his brother's birthmark.

Climate lasts all the time. But weather only a few days.

The letters M. D. signify "mentally deficient."

A census taker is a man who goes from house to house increasing the population.

Longfellow was born in Maine while his parents were traveling on the continent. He made many fast friends; among the fastest were Alice and Phoebe Cary.

You can't make footprints in the sands of time sitting down.

A Lenient Wife

How much personal freedom a husband and wife should permit each other is a question that has been the subject of much discussion both in public and private. It is suspected that a good many husbands grant their wives as little liberty as possible, while taking all they can get for themselves. And in a good many cases the wife adopts a similar attitude.

The grand prize for leniency to a husband, if such is entitled to a prize, would seem to be due Mrs. Rhoda Hood of Louisville, who gave her husband, James E. Hood, a card signed by her reading as follows:

"This is to certify that I hereby permit my husband to go where he pleases, drink what he pleases, and furthermore to enjoy the company of any lady or ladies he sees fit, as I know he is a good judge. I want him to enjoy life while he can, as I know he is going to be dead a long, long time."

Whether Mrs. Hood's attitude was a wise one is open to question, but it probably saved a lot of argument. Her card of manumission came to light when it was found in Hood's pocket after he had been killed by an automobile, while walking alone and sober on a Baltimore street.

The Nation's Capital

Among the troublesome questions which confronted Congress in the early days of the Republic was that of selecting a permanent seat of government. Between 1774 and 1788 the old Continental Congress held sessions at various times in no less than eight different cities. This continual moving about of the seat of government caused Francis Hopkinson, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, to facetiously suggest that the capital be placed on wheels, so that it might readily be moved from place to place as desired.

When the new government under the present constitution was formed in 1789, the seat of government was temporarily located in New York, but was removed to Philadelphia the following year. After much discussion the present site was selected and the cornerstone of the capitol was laid by President Washington on September 18, 1793, with Masonic ceremonies.

The government was moved to Washington in the year 1800 during the administration of President Adams. Of the condition of the place at that time a writer says: "The new city's streets and parks existed on paper only. New arrivals saw gangs of laborers making the first improvements since the clearing away of the forest trees on what has become the most famous historic street in the country, the broad stretch of Pennsylvania Avenue."

Pot Hunters

A federal game warden is indignant about the practice of pot hunters along the Ohio river, who place corn mash, pepped up with alcohol, at the feeding places of wild ducks. The ducks get drunk during the night and are easily caught by hand the next morning.

Henry Walsh, 62, became impatient with the traffic which prevented his crossing a busy New York street. Drawing a pistol, he quickly cleared the way and crossed in triumph. But he re-crossed a moment later—under the escort of a policeman.

Arrested for kicking his wife on a street in Seattle, Herbert Hayes explained: "You see, it was my wife, judge, and she didn't mind." But the judge did mind and gave Herbert 10 days in jail.

The News is $1.50 a year.

Sidelights

Aunt Femie Ann Young, 110 year old Negro woman, reputed to be the oldest person in Tennessee, recently went to the polls for the first time in her life to cast her ballot in a primary election. She voted Democratic.

Herman Voight of Hastings, Minn., celebrated his 100th birthday a few days ago, and laughed over the mistake of his doctor, long since dead, who once told him he was doomed to die of tuberculosis in a few months. That was 60 years ago.

William Houghton, secret service agent of Washington, D. C., has discovered that the new counterfeit ten-dollar bills can be detected at a glance. In the picture of Hamilton on them the former Secretary of the Treasury is cross-eyed.

Sylvester Plumlee, a WPA worker of Olney, Ill., has just married his 10th wife at the age of 63, his bride being Mrs. Viola Martin 54. If his memory serves him correctly, his former wives' first names were Mary, May, Lou, Sada, Stella, Lulu, Sarah, Laura, and Julia, the last having divorced him only a few weeks ago.

Judge J. Baldwin of Dallas has ruled that a man need not pay a detective hired by his wife to watch him. The detective reported that the man had done nothing more immoral than playing dominoes and pool while away from home evenings, so the wife refused to pay for the sleuth's services. The judge decided against the detective when he sued the husband.

Interesting Notes

A gypsy girl carrying a basket of fish through a street in Paris was attacked by more than 100 cats.

After the mysterious death of 3-year-old Richard Henson of Indiana, a feather three inches long was found in his stomach.

An international agreement on uniform storm signals is sought, to replace some 40 different systems now in use.

E. Weston of Hancock, N. H., consults his beard as a barometer. Rain may be expected whenever the curls disappear.

Kirby Magrill of Kansas City, Mo., has one side of his face smooth shaven; on the other is a full-grown red-colored beard. He has never explained why.

Mrs. Helen Kley of Chicago won a divorce because her husband spanked her when he found her using a reducing machine.

When the police surrounded a downtown building in Tulsa, Okla., on a tip that gangsters were inside, seven Baptist ministers came out, got into two cars and drove away.

In Hempstead, N. Y., burglar Emil Gross heard a noise, leaped into bed, and was caught by police snoring ostentatiously between Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Dayton, whom he had intended to rob.

Davy Mollett, 5-year-old boy of Kansas City, Kan., saved the lives of his two younger brothers when fire broke out in their home. Mindful of his mother's admonition to take care of his brothers, Davy took one in his arms, grabbed the other by the hand, and made his way through smoke-filled rooms to the yard and safety.

SHIELA BROWN faced the construction foreman defiantly. "You let go of my arm this minute," she flared. Alone in the field office he grinned triumphantly and pulled her closer. "Now listen, honey, I'm not going to hurt you." His other arm shot out, circling her slim waist.

Suddenly old Grogan, the cook's helper, was struggling with the foreman and Shiela was flung against the wall. She darted through the open door, away from the battering din. Invisible from the camp below, Shiela sat on a hill that paralleled the new railroad spur through the Arizona desert. At last, she realized, it had come; just as old Grogan had told her it would. Grogan, old and crippled, had warned her from the first day she had landed at the camp that the foreman would have to pay her out of his own pocket because the company did not allow women in the camp.

She had intended to go farther west when she had boarded a freight train, but the car she had picked was shoved on to this new spur while she was asleep. Dead broke, half starved, her clothes in tatters, scared to death of the desert, she had accepted the foreman's grinning offer of two dollars a week to take care of his office.

"Well, I'll be cow-kicked if it ain't a girl," said a slow voice. Shiela whirled with a startled cry. A rider on a great black horse had come up silently and was looking down on her in complete surprise.

Shiela stared at his silver-trimmed saddle, his pearl-handled guns, green silk shirt and black beaver hat. "Who are you?" she asked in a small voice.

"From the Rio Grande to the Canadian line I'm known as Buck Sawyer, broncho buster and horseman extraordinary. I saw the sunbeams dancing in your hair and came up for a look. Do you mind if I just sit and watch them?" he smiled.

She heard herself saying, "I guess a big hill like this wouldn't be crowded with two on it."

Before she knew how it had come about Shiela was telling him how she had run away from an orphan asylum a few years ago, and that she had come west hoping to find a newer, fuller life in the open. He listened, hanging on every word. She did say, too, that she often came to this hill in the evening to watch the desert grow dark. He smiled and looked at the sun.

"Great Horn Spoons, here I'm gassing like an old woman when I ought to be twenty miles up the line." He rose to go. She stood up.

There was a dashing smile on his bronzed face, a reckless tilt to his black hat as he leaned toward her as if for a closer look—and kissed her full on the lips. He leaped for the saddle. There was a squeak of straining leather, a jingle of silver spurs, and the great black went over the hill in flying leaps. Shiela watched him out of sight, torn by her emotions.

Every night she sat on the hill, waiting, hoping he'd come, afraid he would. Every day the foreman grew more poisonous in his attentions; now he was trying to be silky with her. The fourth night Buck Sawyer dashed up, tossing her a package.

Shiela opened it with trembling fingers. Neither spoke. Then: "Oh, Buck," she exclaimed, "a real flower! Where did you get it?"

He laughed gayly. "Stole it out of somebody's garden." He dismounted. "Do I get a kiss, Shiela?"

"No," she screamed at him. "You—you're just like all men." She flung the flower in his astonished face and fled blindly.

But his laughter echoed in her ears late into the night—even after she stole back and found the flower. Night after night she sat on the hill, but no knight on a black charger came. Old Grogan urged her to leave the camp, but she stayed on, praying the rider would come back, yet fearful he would. If he didn't come tonight—

And Shiela was fighting strong arms that closed on her from behind. A hand covered her mouth. Then she felt herself being lifted high in the air, and heard the squeak of saddle leather.

A wild thrill went through her. Sobbing her happiness she rested her head on Buck Sawyer's breast. He freed her hands and stared at her, surprised. Then he laughed recklessly.

"What on earth were you going to do with me, Buck?" she asked softly, happily.

"Kidnap you, of course; since I thought I couldn't get you any other way," he grinned triumphantly. "I always get what I go after. And I figured I'd have a chance with you if I had you alone."

Shiela lay soft and warm in his arms—wonderingly. A far-off whisper will called to its desert mate. The moon cut a golden path through the blue-velvet night. Buck Sawyer watched the stars twinkle in her eyes. His face came closer to her in the chaotic silence. "Old Jesse Blaine is a justice of the peace," he told her. "And right back of his house there's a trail that goes clear to the moon and the stars. It's silver by day and golden by night. Will you let me show it to you?"

"Can your horse carry two, Buck?" She snuggled closer.

He pillowed her head with his arms. There came a jingle of silver spurs. Buck laughed. "Old Blacky is snod with wings tonight, my love."

ON THE tenth day Lieutenant Annister sighted the snow-capped peaks looming high above the southernmost limits of the Ice Barrier. Two days later he was able to see the vertical cliffs slashing their black and scarlet flanks across the white wilderness of Antarctic snow. It would take three or four days more to reach Captain Lampson's stricken party at the foot of Mawson's Glacier.

Annister, in a steady lobe behind the skimming sledge, cracked his long whip at the Mawson leader and swore. The ninety-mile gale tore the oath from his lips and shredded it into a sullen echo behind him.

For years Captain Lampson had been basking in the sunlight of public adoration. Adulation from the mobs, ovations from the press, medals from congress! To him had gone the credit for being the first explorer to cross Antarctica from sea to sea. Yes, and he was the discoverer of the Luber range, the Lampson Inlet, the—Bah! A grandstand player, that's what he was! And it was typical of the American populace to make a hero out of a handsome stripling whose courage and resourcefulness had never been put to the test.

Day after day Annister plodded southward. He came at last to a weird region of crevasses and tumbled ice blocks. Presently he found the portable hut Lampson had erected before leading his expedition up to the Polar Plateau. It was half buried in snow, and a tilted sledge peeped through a drift on the windward side.

It was from this shack the captain had sent young Steepton in a mad dash for the base, apparently with all the dogs remaining of the four teams with which he'd started out.

Annister halted his team at the door, his wind-chapped forehead puckering in a frown of puzzlement at the snow heaped in front of it. He kicked the snow away from the entrance, pushed the door inward, and stood for a moment squinting at the interior darkness. He went in then, pulling the door shut behind him.

When his eyes were adjusted to the gloom, he saw two forms, encased in sleeping bags, lying inert upon the floor. In a corner he saw a gaunt-faced, be-whiskered man rise weakly before a Primus stove. It was Lampson.

A sneer sprang to Annister's frost-cracked lips, but it died unuttered. The dull misery and grief in the young captain's eyes was terrible to see. He was staring idiotically at the lieutenant. After a moment his lips began to move, soundlessly. Then, when his voice came, it was faint and hollow, as if he were muttering to himself. "Steepton—made—it?"

Annister wet his lips with his tongue. He found himself suddenly drained of anger, bitterness, resentment.

His glance wandered to the still figures on the floor. Divination came like a knife thrust then. Draimer and Kent were dead! They'd been dead for days, possibly for weeks. Lampson, too, was dead—dead save for the fact that he still stood upon his feet!

"Draimer and Kent?" asked Annister, turning. "What happened?"

The young captain pivoted slowly until he was looking at the motionless figures. "On the Plateau," he murmured. "Draimer fell—in a crevasse. Concussion. Kent lost—both feet—with frost bite. Both—died. But—I sent—Steepton—home—to the—base." He still spoke in a curiously dead voice, like one uttering his thoughts aloud.

Annister's mouth dropped open. He stared at the younger man incredulously. Lampson had not sent for aid! He had only "sent Steepton home." Good God! There had been food and dogs enough to get one man through—and Lampson had chosen to die with the two he couldn't save!

Annister's hard face softened, and he felt his heart churn within him. During countless hours the young captain had waited for death to end his suffering and loneliness. Day after day, night after night he had listened to the screaming wind, endured the awful silences. He had not asked for aid, nor expected it; and now that it was here his numb faculties could not conceive it as a reality.

He was regarding Annister fixedly, yet with a vacant stare that seemed to have no definite focus. Impulsively Annister went to him, threw his arm about the other's waist. Under the deceptive furs he felt the sword thinness of Lampson's body.

Not until then did the glaze go from the captain's eyes. His upper lip twitched, and a flicker of awareness, of recognition, passed across his face. He raised a thin hand, placed it exploringly upon Annister's arm. The fingers tightened weakly, experimentally, before he whispered: "Annister—Tom? Here?" He slumped in the lieutenant's arms.

With a muttered growl of pity Annister lowered him to the floor. "You're damned right, I'm here!" He turned and started for the door. He'd have to get some fire and food—he stopped suddenly and stared at a map lying outspread upon the table. A new mountain range had been marked upon it—and in small blue letters were printed the words: "The Annister Mountains."

The lieutenant wheeled slowly and looked at the unconscious form of Captain Lampson. "A new discovery, eh? Thanks, old man." He wagged his head. "But it's nothing compared to what I've discovered!"

BANKERS WILL MEET IN ANNUAL COUNCIL

Business Men Also Invited to Present Their Views on Services of Banks to the Public

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Robert V. Fleming, President American Bankers Association, has announced that the organization's annual convention will be held at San Francisco, September 21-24, and its program will call in not only bankers but speakers from various lines of business to present their viewpoints and advice.

The plans for the convention discussions take into consideration the fact, he said, that one of the major problems of banking today is to develop its operations along lines that will create greater public understanding of its methods and services.

"It is my earnest conviction that such public understanding of banking is not only an essential defense against attacks from whatever source, but is also requisite to reestablishing it upon a firm and satisfactory basis of profitable operations," Mr. Fleming said.

General Improvement Cited

"The improvement in general conditions which is now taking place should be of material aid to bankers in carrying forward a constructive program for increasingly useful relationships between banking and business, as well as one of more helpful personal business services to all our people. Sound banking conducted in ways the public need and understand must be the aim of successful bank management.

"How can the banker make his operations and policies more understandable to the people of his community? How can banking improve its operating methods and income? These and many similar questions demand the earnest attention of all bankers.

They call for a fresh counselling together and a new interchange of experience and advice among the members of our profession.

"With these thoughts in mind, we have built the convention program with the view of also calling into our councils speakers from various lines of business to give us their viewpoints and advice. I can say without reservation that this is to my mind one of the most crucial years in the evolution of American banking, and that we are passing through a period demanding, as never before, cooperation and mutual exchange of viewpoint among our members and others."

Radio Commencement Exercises

More than 200 widely separated chapters of the American Institute of Banking, the educational section of the American Bankers Association, hold annually in September a simultaneous commencement exercise at which they listen to the speaker of the evening by radio. This is said to be the most extensive graduation ceremony held by any educational institution. The aggregate membership of the chapters, which are located in cities and towns throughout the United States, totals about 35,000 bank employees and officers. The graduates number each year more than 2,500, and total graduates are now over 25,000.

The Business Outlook

NEW YORK.—The natural forces of recovery have demonstrated their strength and have a momentum which may reasonably be expected to carry the country into new high ground, says "Banking," the publication of the American Bankers Association, in its August issue. The momentary stimulation following the distribution of bonus funds to the veterans has practically died away and is no longer an important business factor. A certain degree of uncertainty arising from the national political campaign is unavoidable, the magazine says.

Foreign Trade

The Commerce and Marine Commission of the American Bankers Association has made a report which shows that the foreign trade of the world for the year 1935 on the basis of its estimated physical volume was 78.9 per cent of the 1929 level. This was 2.1 per cent above the volume of 1934 and is the highest since 1929. The gold values of world trade were much lower due to the lower commodity prices in January, 1936. The combined index of 75 countries showed 35.7 per cent of the 1929 average.

National Bank Growth

Comptroller of the Currency O'Connor announced recently that total deposits of the 5,374 national banks in the United States on June 30, 1936, the date of the last call made for statements of condition, aggregated $26,200,453,000. The figure is a new high record for national banks, exceeding by $1,340,998,000, or 5.39%, the amount reported as of March 4, 1936, the previous high record. The current figures show also that deposits increased $3,682,207,000, or 16.35%, over the amount reported as of June 29, 1935, the date of the corresponding call a year ago.
