Banner Month For Chevrolet

August went into the records as another banner month for Chevrolet, according to an announcement made today at the company's offices here. Combined sales of cars and trucks were 95,905 units, the second largest August figure in Chevrolet's history. Truck sales, reported at 23,249, were the highest ever made in August, and the second-highest ever made in any month.

An additional highlight of the dealers' sales performance in August was their sale of 165,197 used cars, nearly 20,000 units more than they sold in August 1935. Used car stocks nationally decreased 3,527 units in the last 10 days of the month, and as this month opened were more than 7500 units lower than at the same date last year.

"The Man Who O-O"

Tales and Traditions from American Political History

BY FRANK E. HAGEN AND ELMO SCOTT WATSON

A STURDY CAMPAIGNER

THERE is a physical side to this business of campaigning for the presidency.

In the earlier days, candidates went personally into the hinterlands, making, not one-night stands but brief pauses interrupted to move on to a newer and perhaps more fertile field. It was a tremendous strain on them physically.

Today, with improved travel accommodations and the help of radio, campaigning is not the arduous task of former years, but it has its moments.

William Jennings Bryan, torch bearer of extraordinary record in politics, doubtless is the man who proved the sturdiest campaigner of them all. And even he almost broke down.

Bryan was physically fit and energetic when he first stumped the country in 1896, bearing his cross of gold. He insisted on patronizing the local trains, riding in the day coaches at the outset of his tour.

In that campaign, Bryan delivered as many as 20 speeches a day, a great part of them from the rear of his slow-moving train. In Tennessee, his throat began to balk. When this was known, many curatives were pressed upon him. One bottle of a remedy for hoarseness was tested by Benton McMillen of Tennessee and found to contain a caustic fluid which might have injured Bryan permanently.

It was toward the end of that campaign that Bryan began to approach exhaustion. He had completed a three-days' series of speeches in Chicago. Despite his splendid physique, the strain began to tell. He was scheduled to travel north of Chicago when his "loop" engagements were ended. But so trying had been the requirements of his tour that it was necessary to delay the start of the party for more than two hours.

The Useful Hairpin

An observant man is Chris Billop of the Baltimore Sun, who writes an informing essay on the uses of the hairpin, in which he describes that implement as a small wire bent double in the middle, and convenient for:

Getting the meat out of walnuts, pecans, and so forth;

Twisting around the hub of a toy automobile to keep the wheel from coming off;

Picking the teeth, if done in the privacy of one's bedroom;

Making emergency repairs in the electrical lighting system, though you had better be pretty careful if you don't want to be electrocuted;

For cleaning tobacco pipes and making holes in cigars that won't draw; for fishing for coins that have fallen into cracks; for pinning curtains to curtain rods; for improving a link for a broken chain.

For perforating the cap of a salt shaker in damp weather; for picking a stubborn cork out of a bottle; for buttoning gloves; for picking locks; for tools for delicate clay modeling; for a hook to keep the door of the medicine cabinet shut, and other domestic projects too numerous to mention. Then Mr. Billop adds:

"Is it any wonder, then, that when a hairpin is needed to pin in the hair, one can never be found?"

Ohioan Wrote Dixie

Whenever the stirring tune of "Dixie" is played, particularly in the South, it is met with hearty applause. Thus do Southerners pay tribute, unconsciously as a rule, to an Ohio Yankee.

For "Dixie" was composed by Daniel Decatur Emmet, born in Mount Vernon, Ohio, in 1818. Emmet, like that other writer of Southern songs, Stephen Foster, never lived in the South.

Emmet was one of the organizers of the first negro minstrel company to tour the country, formed in 1842, when it opened in Chatham Square Theatre, New York. He was afterward associated with Dan Bryant, and in 1865 he formed his own company. He retired in 1878 and died in 1904 at the age of 89.

The song "Dixie" was written in 1859 and instantly became popular. The South adopted it and now after 75 years it stirs its hearers with undiminished enthusiasm.

In 1927 a tablet to Emmet's memory was unveiled in the churchyard of the Calvary Episcopal Church at Fletcher, N. C., the first memorial erected to him in the South, marking another link in the chain which binds the reunited country.

Fishy Folks

Down in Butler County, Alabama, according to the Greenville Advocate, is a colored preacher who has a keen insight into human nature, particularly as applied to sizing up the members of his flock. In a recent sermon he likened various types of church members to certain species of fish, somewhat as follows:

Some, he said, are like a trout, always jumping from one church to another. Others he likened to the sucker—easy to catch, but quick to spoil. Then he mentioned the flounder, which can see only one way—he sees the faults of the preacher, but never sees his own. Another type was compared with the catfish, which hides on the bottom of the creek until a freshet arouses him—the church member who warms up when a revival is going on, but lies dormant at other times. Another type was likened to the eel—a slippery, slick fellow, hard to handle. And so on.

While the good colored brother's sermon was a bit droll, it included observations which might appropriately be applied, not only to the peculiarities of church members, but to those of humanity as a whole. Most of us are rather fishy in some respects.

A Polite Bell Boy

Another striking illustration of what industry and thrift may accomplish, even under the handicap of meager education, is seen in the career of the late Ellsworth M. Statler, millionaire hotel owner.

Born a poor farm boy in Somerset county, Pennsylvania, he had little formal schooling, being forced to go to work when a mere child. Yet he became one of the most able and forceful speakers in the country. He often recalled that his first lessons in English were given him by Tom Duffy, a bartender in the McClure House in Wheeling, where young Statler first became connected with the hotel business as a bell boy at a salary of six dollars a month.

He was 33 when he opened his first restaurant under his own name in Buffalo. His first management of an enterprise of magnitude came at the age of 38, when he built and conducted a large hotel at the Buffalo Pan-American exposition in 1901, followed by his management of the famous Inside Inn at the St. Louis World's fair in 1904.

He then began to build up a chain of magnificent hotels in various cities, including the great Hotel Pennsylvania in New York, where he died.

Mr. Statler's rise was not due to good luck, although his business ventures were more than usually successful. It was due to the fact that he had learned the hotel business from the ground up, and was untiring in his efforts to please his guests. He was known as the most polite bell-boy, and when he became a magnate he had still retained the habit of politeness, and his outstanding trait was consideration for the comfort and happiness of others.

Why He Went Crazy

This story, with various modifications, has been doing duty for a good while, but for the benefit of those who have not chanced to run across it we tell it again.

It concerns an inmate of an asylum, who on being asked by a visitor how he got that way, replied:

"It all started when I married a widow with a grown-up daughter. Then my father, being a widower, married the daughter. That made my step-daughter my step-mother, and my father became my step-son; my wife also becoming the mother-in-law of her father-in-law.

"Then my step-mother had a son, who was my brother, being my father's son; but as the boy was the grandson of my wife, he was also my grandson.

"Then my wife and I had a son. My father's wife is my son's half-sister, and also his grandmother. Now, it is easy to see that my father became my step-son by marrying my step-daughter. Therefore, being my father's father, I am my own grandfather."

The visitor stopped the lunatic at this point, thoroughly satisfied as to why he went crazy.

The First Congress

The first United States Congress was to open on March 4, 1789, but on that day only 21 members were present, eight Senators and 13 Representatives, not a quorum for either house.

Day after day and week after week, the members present met in Federal Hall, which had been fitted up for their accommodation. But it was not until the first day of April that any business could be transacted, because a quorum was lacking. On that day, 30 members of the House having answered to their names, the body was organized and General Frederick Muhlenburg was chosen speaker.

The Senate did not get down to business until April 6, when a quorum was finally mustered. A temporary presiding officer, whose sole duty it was to open and count the electoral votes, was elected. George Washington had the vote of every elector, which was generally known beforehand, for President. The second votes of electors were widely scattered. John Adams was elected Vice-president, although he did not get a majority of the whole number of electors appointed. It was two weeks before General Washington could be apprised of his election and reach the seat of government.

It is difficult to realize in this day, when the Senators and Representatives arrive by airplane, train and motor, what an achievement a journey to the capital was in the days of the first United States Congress.

Sidelights

Johnny Gentry, a Kansas boy, is very fond of a pet pig he calls Doc, and for a very good reason. When Johnny's foot was crushed some time ago, skin from the pig was grafted on the injured member and he was saved from being a cripple.

Readers of a Colorado paper were amused recently by the headline "Mutton and Lamb Marry in Denver." But the facts were not as strange as that. The couple who got married were Douglas Hutton and Mary Laub.

Political opponents recently conveyed a delicate suggestion to a high Japanese official, whom they accused of perjury in connection with a real estate deal. They left on his doorstep a coffin and a disemboweling knife—but he refused to take the hint.

Large numbers of French women who do not like the idea of going through life as madamoiselles are said to pay men to marry them. Then, having averted the stigma of being old maids, they get divorces and pursue their way, entitled to be known as Madame.

A Maryland man drawn for jury duty sought to be excused on the unusual plea that he did not have intelligence enough to serve. But the wise judge, knowing that intelligence is never demanded and not always exhibited by jurors, refused to excuse him.

A bonding company official declares that 90 per cent of the people are potential crooks. Meaning, we assume, that nine persons out of 10 would steal if the reward were large enough and the chances of getting away with it looked favorable. Of course, most of us like to think we are among the absolutely honest 10 per cent.

Dumb Trees
Sonny sat on the lower step, his face resting in two chubby hands.

What's the matter, Sonny? asked a gentleman.

Nothin', just thinkin', replied Sonny.

What about?

Thinkin' how dumb trees are to take off their clothes in winter an' put 'em on in summer.
