Sermon: "The Best News in the World."

If some new Moses should arise, capable of leading the world out of the desert into the promised land; out of mania into sanity; who could speak to the turbulent souls of nations, some magical "Peace, be still," many of us would be ready to call this the world's best news.

But God has even better news than that. Matt. 9, 2. Whether it is real news to us, or not, depends upon our understanding of it. That is where the weekly hour of worship comes in; it promotes spiritual understanding and gives eternal treasures.

C. Henson and E. Sales to Conduct Red Cross Drive

At a recent meeting of the Executive committee of the Champaign County Red Cross, Clark Henson of Broadlands and Edwin Sales of Champaign were appointed as co-chairman to conduct the County Roll Call for the American Red Cross this year.

As co-chairman last year, Mr. Henson and Mr. Sales, with the assistance of the chairman of the Branches, increased the membership by several hundred members.

The American Red Cross, in facing its greatest peace-time test, this year appeals to the American public for a million more members to support its constant battle against human suffering.

During the past year we have been drawn closer to the Red Cross through its far-flung disaster relief, its aid to the innocent non-combatants of war, as well as through its daily services designed to stamp out misery in the form of disease and the ever present threat of accidental death.

Those of us who have seen the Red Cross grow in recent years can understand the need for a million more members. The natural phenomena of disaster and the dangers of a mechanized age continue to be the source of suffering and accidental death.

We must recognize that the ability of this great organization to serve is directly proportionate to the membership support of the public.

This year's appeal of the Red Cross for your support will be made Nov. 11-20. Our community has never failed to respond to the Red Cross call for assistance, and we feel confident that we shall be proud to enroll our share of the million more members.

News 200 Years Ago

In connection with the 200th anniversary of the Maryland Gazette, some early copies of that newspaper were exhibited.

The news and advertisements of early days were naturally quite different from what is found in current newspapers, as they reflected the customs and beliefs of their time.

One of the stories from Vienna told of the burning of several persons convicted of witchcraft, among them "a midwife who had baptized 2,000 children in the name of the devil." A local item related the experience of a negro slave who struck a white man in an argument over a dog fight. The negro was sentenced to have one of his ears cut off "pursuant to the law in such cases."

Among the advertisements was one announcing the arrival of a cargo of "about 200 choice slaves which will be exposed for sale on Thursday the 22nd of this instant."

In its issue of Oct. 21, 1762, the Maryland Gazette published the news of the birth of a son to the British king and queen, which had occurred on August 12. The story bore the headlines: "Great Joy to the Nation! A Prince of Wales is Born. God Save the King." This was the dissolute and notorious character who afterward became George IV.

The Maryland Gazette was frequently suspended for varying periods, but is credited by the Librarian of Congress with being "the dean of present-day American newspapers."

Big Scale Mining

What is described as the most spectacular mining operation in the world today is under way in Arizona, where an estimated 74 million tons of earth must be stripped from a copper ore deposit, as a preliminary to mining the ore itself.

This excavation work is going forward at the rate of about 28,000 tons a day, using power shovels that lift two tons or more of earth at a bite. The earth is deposited in special trucks and hauled away to fill a nearby canyon.

Under the surface of the ground, at an average depth of 420 feet, lies the vast beds of ore, ascertained by diamond drilling to be approximately a mile long, half a mile wide, and 800 feet thick. It is estimated that 250 million tons of ore may ultimately be taken from the mine. It is of low grade however, and contains only about 10 pounds of copper to the ton.

Such lean ore could only be mined at a profit by mass production and with the most modern equipment. Naturally, an enormous amount of capital was necessary to undertake the development of the mine at all.

Industry and Peace

In a recent statement on the attitude of American industry toward war and peace, the National Association of Manufacturers makes an eloquent plea for peace which includes the following points:

American industry hates war, which destroys lives and wrecks homes, with economic chaos and crushing depression as its inevitable aftermath. Ultimately no one can escape the ruin of war.

American industry wants peace for peace is the life blood of progress and must be the national objective. There should be no misunderstanding of industry's position on the matter. A public will to peace, coupled with wise public policies and affirmative action to this end will keep us out of war.

Industry opposes profiteering the utilization of war psychology to boost prices for the purpose of making excessive profits. The association calls upon all its members to exercise vigilance against any unjustified price or profit policies.

The use of this crisis to excuse profiteering or to pursue partisan political objectives is not only indefensible and dangerous, but reprehensible morally. The present situation calls for agreement on common objectives, but the democratic process should never be abandoned. The statement concludes:

"In a world distraught by force, the best way to preserve representative democracy is to practice it."

Do You Know Illinois?

By Edward J. Hughes
Secretary of State

Q. When was the first United States district court held in Illinois?

A. December, 1819.

Q. Who was the presiding judge?

A. Nathaniel Pope.

Q. How long was Pope United States district judge in Illinois?

A. For 30 years.

Q. When was a judge of the United States Supreme Court first assigned to circuit duty in Illinois?

A. Not until 1837, nineteen years after admission of the State to the Union.

Q. How many court sessions of the federal court were provided for in 1819?

A. Two sessions a year.

Q. Where were the first two sessions of the court held?

A. The first at Kaskaskia and the second at Vandalia which by that time had become the capital.

Q. What was the usual length of court sessions at this time?

A. Seldom more than three days.

Q. What happened to the records of the United States court in Illinois during Pope's incumbency of 30 years?

A. Six years following Pope's death all but three volumes of transcripts were removed to Chicago. They were destroyed in the fire of 1871. The three volumes remaining are at Springfield.

Q. What interesting case involving Fort Armstrong at Rock Island is found in the volumes at Springfield?

A. A case in which two soldiers were shot from ambush by two Indians. A third Indian, an aged chief, appeared against them. Pope sentenced the two to be hanged.

Q. What was the reaction of the old chief to the sentence?

A. On hearing the sentence he came forward and said, When I came down here I had hoped to find that Che-wa-cha-ra and Who-rah-jin-ka had been better treated, but my heart is oppressed with the cruelty they have received. I did hope that pity would have been found for them, and that mercy would be shown them. But let peace lie between us.

Attached to a telephone receiver by a rubber tube, a device has been invented to enable a business man's secretary to record both ends of the conversation he holds by wire.

Recent experiments conducted by two Canadian scientists indicate that silicosis, a lung disease contracted by those who work in the atmosphere of silica dust, may be banished by the inhalation of finely atomized aluminum dust.

Ancient History

By ALICE NORRIS LEWIS

WNU Service.

IF YOU listen in on the radio, doubtless you have heard my husband broadcast through QXX. He is one of the popular violinists of the air, and his "fan" mail comes in bushels. And "mash notes" — well, it's lucky I'm not a jealous wife!

SHORT STORY
This story, though, is about the time when the general public knew just as much about Phil's fiddling as they did about the radio. So, you see, it well deserves its titling, "Ancient History."

Phil had been engaged to play at a moving picture performance. Even the movies weren't what they are now—and there's another argument in favor of my title! It was a great honor for him to have been chosen, and only through his teacher, Josef Stransky, could it have happened.

But Phil arose the day of the show, deathly sick with stage fright. As the morning wore on, he grew worse. By the time he left for the theater he was almost prostrate with nervousness. "I feel," he remarked, as he left the house, "like a man on his way to the gallows!" And, my word—he looked it.

I had decided I couldn't bear to go and see him fail. Yet, as the time drew near, I found I couldn't keep away. So I pinned on my hat—it was in the days of hat-pins, more ancient history—and ran for a trolley car.

The darkened theater was a-buzz with human voices as I stumbled to a seat high in the balcony. The bigness of the place and the size of the audience almost frightened me.

When the orchestra had played its little interlude and Phil appeared, I gave a smothered "oh." No amount of make-up could hide the frightened look in his eyes nor conceal, from me, at least, the trembling of his mouth.

For one brief, awful minute I stared at him. If I could only do something to help him—to give him courage. If I could only cry out to him to forget himself. To remember, if he failed, how he would disappoint Stransky; good, old Stransky, who, I knew, had almost come to blows with the manager of the theater in order to get him this chance to play! But I couldn't! I could only sit there and see him fail!

I twisted and wrung my hands in agony. I clasped and unclasped them, nervously, quite unaware that I struck them together in so doing and that the sound took on the semblance of faint applause. Faint it must have been, but it was enough to start me about me. You know how one or two hand claps will sometimes start a storm of noise? Unconsciously, I instigated something.

The second balcony caught the contagion. The noise grew. By the time the floor took it up, the second balcony was a near riot of stamping feet.

Phil stood, dazed. He tried once or twice to begin to play, but it was no use. He had to wait for order to be restored.

When, at last, quiet reigned and I dared glance at him, I saw he had mastered his fear. In that brief interval, he had pulled himself up by his bootstraps, to use a homely expression.

I think I have never, to this day, heard him play better. There was no need for me to worry about whether he would receive an encore. Mine was the only pair of hands that did not call for one. Not only one, but two and three!

Before the performance was over I slipped out and sped for home. I did not mean that Phil should ever know I had been to hear him, or that I have ever seen him so near to piteous failure.

When he came in, close on my heels, I sat knitting placidly by the window. Women used to knit, you know, in ancient history days.

He put down his violin and came to stand beside me.

"Joy," he said, "I almost failed. I was so scared that I could hardly raise my violin to my shoulder, and just then somebody began to clap. In a moment the house was in an uproar, and some kid in the second balcony started a near riot, stamping. By the time the ushers had quieted things I had found myself. I was bound to win the next applause, and I did."

I bent over my knitting. I did not dare look at him. "I—I thought you'd get by," I murmured, faintly. "If I knew who started the applause, I'd go down on my knees before them," he went on, fervently. "It certainly saved my reputation—"

"Since you don't know," I replied, "would you mind going down on your knees before me and picking up my ball of yarn? There it goes, rolling under the piano!"

If Phil reads this story, for the first time he'll know who started the applause that saved the day for him. But he won't read it. The title "Ancient History" will scare him away. He isn't a student of past events. He's only one of the best fiddlers on the air. Tune in some night on QXX and hear him, won't you?
