Parking Problem Simply An Old, Old Headache

Parking the family car on Main street or around the courthouse square in any county seat town of Illinois today is somewhat of a problem, but if the motorist has trouble in finding an empty stall for his machine, he may console himself by learning that less than 40 years ago the drivers of horse drawn rigs sometimes experienced the same difficulties. In other words, there was not always room for "old dobbin" and the carriage or wagon.

As late as 1906, says the Illinois Writers' Project, WPA, a Montgomery county newspaper was calling attention to the lack of adequate hitching facilities for the farmers' horses. The courthouse square in Hillsboro was crowded with teams, and the hitching racks in the rear of store buildings were in need of a general overhauling. In fact, the newspaper editor went so far as to issue a warning by saying, "If we want the farmers' trade we must provide for their accommodation with better places to tie."

Sermon: "Go ye into the Vineyard."

Eternity will be the harvest of today. We can sow for a good harvest, or we can do like the Sioux Indians, who once when sent a supply of grain for sowing, ate it up. Men are constantly sacrificing their eternal future to the passing enjoyment of the present moment.

Hay Making Adds to Farm Accident Toll

Falls from loads and mows, and fingers pinched or cut off in pulleys, comprise most of the hay-making accidents reported these days, according to the Illinois Agricultural Association's department of safety.

Very few common farm activities cause as many mishaps as does haying, says C. M. Seagraves, department director. Most of these injuries could be avoided, however, if: the racks were not overloaded; the driver would stay on level ground; other riders on the load would sit down while moving from the field to the barn; hay forks and pitchforks were handled with the greatest care at all times; all workers would recognize the danger of getting fingers caught in pulleys.

Last year haying accidents injured hundreds of farmers in Illinois, Seagraves reports. This year, let's make hay safely, as well as when the sun shines.

The Situation Needs Checking

For some time we have been hearing rumors about alleged subversive activities existing at the University of Illinois in Urbana. While we listened with alert interest to these reports, details have been vague and it was deemed better to express no opinion until actual facts were forthcoming on the situation.

However, in the last few days these reports have become more factual. And in view of one matter of record in the United States district clerk's office here the fact that more than a dozen U. of I. faculty members have applied for their first citizenship papers—it seems someone should do a bit of investigating about conditions in our state University.

If the matter ended there everything might look all right; the fact that a dozen faculty members have asked for citizenship might indicate a new wave of patriotism at U. of I. But their applying doesn't tell all of the story.

For example, only three of the applicants have returned their papers properly filled out for the next step in obtaining their citizenship. What of the others? Was their original request just a gesture? One of them made a first application in 1916—and never made any further attempt to obtain full citizenship.

Just exactly what are our children being taught in this University which we citizens maintain with our tax dollars? Just what kind of men and women, whom we likewise pay with tax dollars, are doing the teaching there?

It seems it is high time some authority undertook to find out the answers to these questions—and other questions which indicate strongly that subversive activities exist at U. I., unchecked or even abetted by certain faculty members. If the Champaign county authorities won't investigate this situation—as we have been informed they will not—then the federal department of justice should waste no time in conducting a thorough probe.

These are trying times all over the world. Are parents and taxpayers going to keep our heads buried in the sand while laxity or even subversive doctrines destroy our children's confidence in our great American principles?

Beverage glass holders having long handles that can be thrust into the ground have been invented for outdoor use.

A holder for a pound cube of butter has been invented that has a knife sliding along a measured scale for cutting off desired quantities.

Small enough to be carried in a pocket, a spun aluminum reflector has been invented for use with the new small flash bulbs for photographers.

Announcement has been made of the development of "Ameripol," a new synthetic rubber described as capable of replacing natural rubber.

Knee high waterproof trouser legs made of the same material as the raincoat to which they are attached have been made to keep men's trousers dry.

A new technique for sewing ruptured blood vessels has been developed. The ends of the artery are threaded over a slender rod of glucose, which dissolves within a few seconds after the artery has been sewn.

Indian Traders Earned An Honest Bead or Two

Experts in archeological research who have made a study of Indian customs in Illinois are of the opinion that aboriginal inhabitants of this area were not only great warriors, but also thrifty merchants, so to speak.

According to the Illinois Writers' Project, WPA, records show that many an Indian probably found time to earn an honest bead or two through trade as well as to sharpen battle-axes. Excavations in Massac and Pope counties have revealed fluoride beads, Galena ore, and copper. The last two items are of special interest since there are no copper mines near these areas.

In Fulton county, it is said that evidence of trading among Indians was indicated also by the presence of mica pipestone, marine shells, and a considerable number of copper objects. Some scholars surmise that not all of this metal was brought down by the glaciers, but that part of it was carried into the region.

When Mrs. Augusta Basck of Bismarck, N. D., was given a choice of paying $10 a month alimony to her husband or going to jail she chose the jail.

Do You Know Illinois?
By Edward J. Hughes
Secretary of State

Q. When was Starved Rock acquired by the State?

A. The bill providing for the creation of a park commission of three members and the acquisition of Starved Rock and adjacent acres became a law June 10, 1911.

Q. How much was appropriated for the purchase of Starved Rock and adjoining acres?

A. $150,000 and as much more of the reservation as could be secured for that amount.

Q. Who was the owner of Starved Rock and what price did he set?

A. Ferdinand Walthers. He asked $150,000 for the Rock and the adjacent 280 acres.

Q. What was Walthers paid?

A. $146,000.

Q. When were Starved Rock and adjacent properties transferred to the people of the State of Illinois?

A. Dec. 20, 1911, after the purchase of other small parcels of land.

Q. How was Starved Rock first operated?

A. Since the act providing for the purchase did not provide funds for operation, the commission reserved the post-card and souvenir concession and secured a clerk who attended to sales, furnished guides, and conducted an information bureau.

Q. Were the concessions successful?

A. At the end of the first year the earnings to the amount of $3,017 were turned over to the State Treasury.

Q. How did attendance during the first year of State ownership compare with attendance when Starved Rock was privately owned?

A. The attendance increased from 25,000 to 75,000.

Baby Heaven

By ILA LEWIS

(McClure Syndicate—WNU Service.)

"I HAVE just the place you are looking for!" confided the real estate agent. "No radio playing after eleven p. m., no saxophones, no dogs or musical students allowed—why, you couldn't ask for a quieter place than Bayberry Haven!"

"What was the name?" inquired my wife in a startled tone. "Oh—I see." She added. "For just a moment I thought you said 'Baby Heaven!'"

"Ha! ha!" laughed the agent, in what I thought at the time was a remarkably hollow tone. "Ha! ha! ha!"

And so we moved to Bayberry Haven. A little far out, but sunlight in every room, an outside entrance to every apartment, and a real grass lawn in the middle.

"Welcome to Baby Heaven!" cried the iceman gayly as my wife let him in at the front door the next morning.

And Baby Heaven it was.

As I ran for my train in the morning, I would leap over a toy automobile, broad jump over eight kiddie cars in a row, pole vault over a scooter bike and roll merrily down the sidewalk with two roller skates under one foot.

True, there was no radio playing after eleven at night. There were no dogs, there were no saxophones, there were no musical students. But there was no law against the infant above us, and the infant below us, and the infant to the right of us, and the infant to the left of us, taking regular turns all night to disrupt the peace and quiet for which I had come to Bayberry Haven.

Sometimes, when starting out in the morning, I would look about me at the beautiful sunshine and at the little porch of green lawn, and I would determine to ask some of the boys from the office out to dinner that night, so the poor city-bound oafs could see what a blade of grass looked like.

But ah, the kiddies! The kiddies! By dinner time, what with their abandoned dollies, and their lost caps, and their paper airplanes—you know, you fold up little pieces of paper and sail them all over the place and hear the janitor swear—well, what with them scattered knee deep all over our little green lawn space, I don't believe the boys from the office ever did get to see a blade of grass.

And the chalk marks on the walk! How my friend, Hobbsnotch, of the Evening Graphoneews, used to pore over them! He was writing his book then—you know, "Sally in Our Back Alley"—and of course he wanted to get it suppressed in Boston. He needed the money. He has claimed ever since, with tears of gratitude in his eyes, that his success dates from the first time I asked him out to dinner and he read the words that the innocent little kiddies had chalked on my front steps.

One Saturday afternoon I went to the grocery store on an errand for my wife. I thought at first I was back on the East Side. But I soon realized that they were not push carts—they were baby buggies. A sea of baby buggies. I counted eighteen of them in one block. You can depend on the number, because I am a certified public accountant.

If you saw a young couple strolling down to the grocer's without a baby buggy, you just knew that they had one at home, with a nice-reliable-colored-girl-by-the-hour-that-loves-children wheeling it up and down the sidewalk.

Or if they didn't have any baby buggy at all, you knew that Santa Claus had them down on his list, and they would find one in a stocking on Christmas morning.

I should have known it would be like that. I should have known that every couple with one or two or three or four or five children—or even those young couples whose mammas are still squabbling over which one shall make the bassinet—I should have known that they would all move out here: It's so good for the children, you know.

And so the stork hovers over Bayberry Haven constantly. It's not his fault. It's the sunshine, and the fresh air. And you know how it is, in an epidemic of that sort you begin to get panic-stricken. Fear of contagion; force of example; power of suggestion; and all that sort of thing. You, too, may fall a victim!

A stork, after all, is only human. Or inhuman, whichever way you look at it. He might, some day, get mixed up in his chimneys. And, frankly speaking, being a man who is fond of his peace and quiet, I had rather be elsewhere when it happened.

So that is why, last week, we gave notice to the landlord that we were leaving Bayberry Haven on the first of the month.

But only this morning my wife whispered to me that it might be just as well to stay . . .

Refining Petroleum

Petroleum may now be refined economically, without the use of excessive heat, by using liquid propane as a precipitating agent for the heavier parts of the oil, it was disclosed at a recent American Chemical society meeting.

For the Love of Pete

By LEROY W. GORE

(McClure Syndicate—WNU Service.)

THE slim, blonde girl stood in front of Frederickson's market writing diligently on a pad of paper. The broad-shouldered young man in the doorway of Lippincott's grocery across the street took careful aim with a large potato. The potato sent the pad and pencil spinning from the girl's hand. She gasped in astonishment, picked up the potato and scurried behind a post.

Papa Lippincott, waddling down the street from the corner cafe where Mr. Daniels of the Mammoth Retailers' Alliance had indulged in his mid-afternoon cup of coffee, laughed boisterously. "Serves her right!" he told Daniels. "That Paula Frederickson is a snooper like her old man. Always copying our prices off the windows so they can cut us a few cents."

Young Pete Lippincott started up the ladder in front of the store. "Very neat marksmanship, young man," the dapper Mr. Daniels approved. "What are you building here?"

The pillar of canned corn beside the entrance was already 10 feet high. "We have a canned goods special each Saturday, sir," Pete explained. "Dad borrowed this pillar idea from one of the city stores. It attracts a lot of attention."

Across the street Paula Frederickson was pulling apart the two halves of a potato, rejoined neatly with a match. On one of the halves was written: "Meet me at the Inn tonight, seven o'clock."

For twenty years Lippincott of Lippincott's grocery and Frederickson of Frederickson's market had faced each other across Main street without a good word. Both would probably have suffered a stroke of apoplexy if they had guessed the romantic inclinations of their children.

But Papa Lippincott was happy enough as he fixed his signature to a check for $5,000 and handed it to Mr. Daniels. The check paid for fifty shares of stock in the Mammoth Retailers' Alliance and, according to the contract which Mr. Daniels had just handed him, entitled Papa to "an additional ten per cent discount on all goods purchased from said firm."

"Let old man Frederickson snoop around after my prices now," Papa Lippincott exulted.

Mr. Daniels consulted his wrist watch. "I must be on my way. I'm due in Chicago tomorrow morning."

In the meantime Paula Frederickson had halved a potato from the Frederickson stock, and written her reply to Pete's message: "I'll be there, sweetheart." Across the street Pete had clamped a heavy basket to the ladder, and was transferring cans to the top of the pillar. It was Paula's intention to hurl the potato into the basket, but her aim was woefully amiss. The potato struck Pete squarely between the shoulders. He jumped, uttered a cry of pained surprise and the ladder scraped dangerously along the wall toward the carefully constructed pillar.

Mr. Daniels, choosing this unfortunate moment to make his exit, was buried beneath an avalanche of tin cans. When they removed him he was considerably bruised and quite, quite unconscious.

"I ain't blaming you for throwing that potato," Papa Frederickson was telling Paula next evening. "I wouldn't blame you if you threw a brick at Lippincott's dumb-headed boy, but why did you do it?"

Paula sighed wearily. "Just a silly notion. What were the damages to Mr. Daniels?"

"Three busted ribs and a fractured leg. He won't be out of the hospital for quite a spell."

Paula wondered what damages Mr. Daniels would claim.

But the most crushing blow of all was the way Pete had run out on her. She'd seen him hurry down the street even before the crowd gathered. Likely he was still in hiding, fearful that Paula might confess she hadn't thrown the potato at him maliciously, as everyone supposed. He needn't be afraid she would drag him into the case. She wasn't anxious to confess her love for a sneaking coward. But Paula couldn't swallow the lump in her throat.

And suddenly Pete was in the library. Pete! hatless, his hair mussed, but grinning widely.

Papa was on his feet, angry. "See here, young man. Ain't you Lippincott's caused us enough trouble?"

But Pete's eyes were on Paula. "Darling!" he cried. "You're a heroine!"

Paula stared at him, completely bewildered.

A flood of words tumbled from Pete. "I got suspicious of this man Daniels the minute I heard he'd nicked dad for five thousand. I hopped a plane to Chicago and talked to the president of the Mammoth Retailers' Alliance. Daniels is wanted by the police in dozens of places. He collected a half million this week with his stockselling racket. And the reward for his capture is $5,000 . . . Oh, Paula, if you hadn't thrown that potato—"

"Tell me, Paula," Papa interrupted, "why did you throw that potato?"

Paula was giggling hysterically. "For the love of Pete!"

Long View News

J. A. Hart made a business trip to Michigan, Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Warnes were Sunday dinner guests in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Merton Parks.

A. Reed Hales is at his home recovering from an operation to which he submitted at Mercy hospital several days ago.

Bob Parks, Loyd Davis, James Warnes, Esther Boyd, Wanda Nohren, of Longview, and June Davis, Potomac, spent the Fourth sightseeing in Chicago.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Boyd, Miss Alma Davis, Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Hagerman, Ludlow, were guests at a picnic supper in the E. C. Hagerman home Sunday evening.

Class of 1938, L. V. H. S. picnicked at Crystal Lake, Urbana, Sunday. Attending from Longview were George Apgar, Wayne Warnes, Esther Boyd, and their guests.

Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Kilgore and twin sons, Jim and Jon, of Altamont, were guests in the Merton Parks home Sunday afternoon. Mrs. Kilgore is the former Marie Willis, younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Perry Willis who moved from Longview to Oklahoma several years ago.

W. C. T. U. met Tuesday afternoon with Mrs. Richard Davis. Mrs. Edythe Warnes presided at the business session, with devotional and lesson in charge of Mrs. Cora Warnes. The lesson theme was "Our Country, Our Obligations, and Our Privileges." No August meeting will be held and in September election of officers will be in order.

Wienke Will Is Filed

The will of the late Louie J. Wienke of Homer, on file with the county clerk Saturday, disposed of personal property valued at $500 and real estate valued at $13,000. Mr. Wienke died July 1.

He leaves his widow, Mrs. Caroline Wienke, all of his personal property and a life estate in the real estate.

At the death of Mrs. Wienke, the property is to be divided between their four children: Louie, jr., Esther M., Martin and Caroline C. D. Wienke.

The two daughters are to receive $800 more than the two sons because the deceased had advanced them that much.

Mrs. Wienke is named executor of the instrument to serve without bond. The will was signed in the presence of Edwin Moore and Martin Sy. — News-Gazette.

Ancients Enjoyed Many Kinds of 'Iced Drinks'

Early history of ice cream is fragmentary and the name of the actual originator is not known. It is recorded that Alexander the Great, the Ptolemys and Julius Caesar preferred "iced drinks," made with wine and snow, resembling our water ices. The writings of Marco Polo mention certain frozen sweets he enjoyed in China in 1275. Italian records indicate a thriving ice cream trade there in the Fifteenth century and Catherine de Medici, when she moved from Florence to France, took her own "gelateria" or freezing plant with her. The first printed record of it in England appeared in 1769.

Legends differ on its introduction into America, but credit most generally is given to the Virginia Cavaliers, notes a writer in the Philadelphia Inquirer. In 1777 what is probably the first advertisement for ice cream appeared in a New York paper. During the administration of James Madison, his wife, Dolly, served it frequently at her levees. In 1832 a Negro confectioner of this city, Augustus Jackson, offered ice cream for sale at a dollar a quart. Several accounts claim that this man and the chef at the White House during the Madison administration are the same.
