Concealed Evidence

By NAN CLIFFORD
(McClure Syndicate—WNU Service.)

MARY MARTIN stared aghast at George's Aunt Olivia. "Bake bread!" she cried nervously. "Oh, I'm perfectly certain I never could do that. Besides," brightly, "we really get awfully good bread at the delicatessen."

"Nonsense!" snorted Aunt Olivia. "I brought George up on homemade bread and I'm positive he won't thrive on any other kind. I noticed," eyeing Mary accusingly, "that he looked peaked when he stopped in to see me last night. And only three months married!"

"That's because he's been palling around with Professor Jenkins next door," retorted Mary with spirit. "George wouldn't look so starved and neglected if he didn't go wading through swamps getting his feet soaked and his face all scratched up. He's getting absolutely balmy about botanical specimens."

"George needs to eat plenty of home-made bread," declared Aunt Olivia with irritating persistency, quite ignoring Mary's outburst. "Get paper and pencil, my dear. I'll give you my three hour recipe. It's as simple as A B C. One hour to set, one hour to rise, one hour to bake."

Mary sighed, but gave in. To preserve harmony in the family, she even promised to bake bread that very day.

It was two o'clock when Mary, following Aunt Olivia's instructions, wrapped the bowl containing the bread sponge snugly in a blanket and placed it in the south window to set.

There was no sun. Clouds threatened rain and a depressing chill was in the air.

Mary watched the clock anxiously. At exactly three she prepared to wrestle with the next problem—that of making the sponge into loaves. Strangely, she found the unpleasant-looking lump of dough at the window much as she had left it. And Aunt Olivia had said it would have risen to the top of the mixing bowl. Uncertainly, she decided to let it set awhile longer.

Four o'clock came and the dough was unchanged! Five o'clock—and George due shortly!

All in a dither, her cheeks blazing and her hands cold, Mary seized the yellow bowl and made for the back yard. Aunt Olivia should never hear of it! Never! As for George—it was just as well he shouldn't hear of it either. At 5:15 she ran around the corner to the delicatessen.

"Gosh! This is good bread, honey," enthused George that night at dinner. "I stopped in to see Aunt Olivia for a minute and she told me of the treat I had coming." He helped himself to another slice.

"I'm glad you like it, darling," she said blithely. "You must eat loads of it. Aunt Olivia says you're beginning to look peaked."

George grinned sheepishly. "Poor old Aunt Olivia can't reconcile herself to my man's estate. I owe her a lot, honey, and I'm glad you let her boss you a little. And say! are you some cook or are you some cook? This bread is better than any Aunt Olivia ever poked a fist into."

Mary's conscience gave her a stab. But, in spite of it, she could not help but relish the keen joke.

"Holy catnip! come here!" shouted George the next morning.

Mary rushed in from the kitchen to find him standing bung-eyed at the dining room window.

"Look; look there!" he cried, pointing a finger excitedly. "A magnificent specimen of fungi right in our own garden. I must call Professor at once. He'll be ga-ga over it. Just yesterday we were discussing the types of fungi found in this climate. I'm dead sure this is calvatia gianica—a type he's never before discovered around here. It must be fully eighteen inches in diameter, plant fibrose, nearly sessile, cortex white and smooth, becoming yellowish. See—"

But Mary was not listening. Horrified, she stared out of the window. Yes, that was the very spot. Close to the syringa bush. A white mass of something that could be only one thing had pushed aside the thin layer of soil with which she hastily covered the contents of the yellow bowl. During the night, the temperature had turned considerably warmer.

Beaming with his glad tidings, George started for the garden gate to summon the professor. Mary clutched his arm.

"Wait—a minute—darling!" trying to overcome the paroxysm of laughter that convulsed her. "That's not—that's not a toadstool."

"Toadstool!" exploded George indignantly. "Of course, it's not a toadstool. It's a very rare specimen of—"

"Homemade bread!" gasped Mary.

George looked alarmed. "What's the matter, honey?" he asked anxiously. "Don't you feel well? Are you feverish or something?"

Mary choked, but managed to explain.

"Anyhow," she sighed contentedly, after she'd been forgiven for a number of things—the most important being George's injured feelings, "I'll never have to try to make bread again, thank goodness!"

"The Name Is Familiar"

BY FELIX B. STREYCKMANS and ELMO SCOTT WATSON

'Annie Oakleys'
IN THE show business, all passes for free tickets are known as Annie Oakleys. The reason for calling them that is vague, but the personality of the original Annie Oakley for whom they are named is not. She was America's greatest markswoman—and "America's Sweetheart," too, long before Shirley Temple—or even Mary Pickford won that title.

Known as "Little Sure Shot," Annie Oakley used to perform feats of marksmanship with the pistol and rifle in Buffalo Bill's Wild West show. One of the many versions of how free tickets came to be known as "Annie Oakleys" is as follows:
Before her performances, she used to appear outside the tent, toss a pack of cards into the air and shoot at them. Anyone who was able to survive the scramble and obtain a card with a bullet hole in it was given a free admission to the show. Just an ordinary playing card would not admit you—it had to have a bullet hole in it.

In other words, it had to be an "Annie Oakley."

Early Use of Furs
Early man lacked a natural fur skin which thinned out for warm temperatures and thickened with the approach of cold. The most logical solution of the first clothing problem was to use the skin from an animal slain for food. Using a crude tanning process the skins were cleansed of flesh, stretched and dried. The resulting bear, lion or tiger skin was worn Tarzan fashion about the body. In winter, pelts from smaller animals covered the extremities from the frosty wind and snow.

H. W. Six, township treasurer, places his annual financial report in this issue.

The largest crowd ever to attend a free movie show in Broadlands was present last Saturday night, is the opinion of a number of our citizens.

Pioneer Brought Road to His Cabin Door

In the 1830s when Illinois roads straggled across unsettled lands, a pioneer decided that his cabin was too far from the great Galena road, an important highway in early days.
To move his cabin would have meant much work, and the new location would have been less pleasing. The settler, thereupon, says the Illinois Writers' Project, WPA, staked out a spur in the road and drove over it time after time to "make tracks." Travelers, noting the well beaten route, readily followed it and the resourceful pioneer soon realized that, instead of moving his cabin to the main road, he had brought the road to his cabin door.

THE PUBLIC NAMES ITS OWN CAR LEADER

"CHEVROLET'S First AGAIN"

GENERAL MOTORS' NUMBER ONE CAR

Men and products may vie for leadership, but it is the public that confers it. . . . And again in 1940, for the ninth time in the last ten years, people are buying more Chevrolets than any other make of car!
