Sermon: "Christian Citizenship."

Christians are citizens of two worlds. It is somewhat like the Roman colonists of Jesus' day. They were away in distant corners of the great empire. But wherever they lived, it was a bit of Rome on foreign soil. They and their children were Roman citizens. Their names were enrolled on the lists of the Eternal City. They may never have seen the streets and temple of the mother city; but they knew themselves to be a part of her.

The Christian's position in this world is like that. "Our citizenship is in heaven; whence also we wait for a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ." Phil. 3-20.

1940 Call For Red Cross Recruits

The 1940 Poster of The American Red Cross sounds the call to the nation to serve humanity within the ranks of this army of mercy.

KEEPING step with the boys called to the colors in America's new defense army and navy, will be the American Red Cross, fulfilling its mission of service to the men in the line and to their loved ones at home, Chairman Norman H. Davis announced in Washington.

"Several thousand Red Cross nurses already have been called to the colors," Mr. Davis said, "and Red Cross field directors, and thousands of Red Cross workers in Chapters throughout the nation, are ready to help America's soldiers and sailors with personal problems, just as in the 1917-18 World War period.

"Every patriotic man and woman in the United States, who wants to do his or her share in upholding the national defense of our nation, can do so by sharing in the vitally important work of the Red Cross. Join as a member of the local Chapter during the roll call, November 11 to 30, and through your support you will strengthen the Red Cross army of mercy.

"Recruits are needed not alone as members, but also as volunteer workers in the Red Cross Chapters."

Red Cross work will continue undiminished in its usual domestic program of relief in disaster; community public health nursing; safety education and promotion of the Junior Red Cross. An individual membership supports all of this work, not only in Red Cross Chapters, but in the nation. Relief to war victims in Europe is financed by the $20,000,000 war relief fund contributed by the public during the summer of 1940.

State Division of Old Age Assistance

During the years ending June 30, the State Division of Old Age Assistance spent more than a quarter of a million dollars providing funerals for recipients of old age assistance who died that year. It is pointed out that indigent persons on the assistance rolls need not worry about the possibility of receiving a pauper funeral. The Division is prepared to pay for a funeral up to the standard of a family in moderately well-to-do circumstances.

Large Crib Burns On Saturday Night

The large corn crib in the west part of town, the property of the Broadlands Grain & Coal Co., was destroyed by fire last Saturday night. The fire started about 8 o'clock and was first discovered by Ray Thode and Bud Struck, who had started to the country to see Edgar (Tarzan) David, who was injured when kicked by a tractor. The fire started in the north end of the crib at the top and burned rapidly. The crib was a large one and made a very hot fire, threatening the homes of those living west and south of the building. Burning embers fell on some of the houses, making it necessary for the owners to keep their roofs soaked with water. The front end of the Malcolm Pigg home was badly blistered by the intense heat.

People living near the crib are rejoicing that the building is gone, as it obstructed their view and was somewhat of an eye sore. The crib had not been used for a number of years. Insurance on the building lapsed some years ago, so we have been informed. The origin of the fire has not definitely been determined.

Unreliable War News

Perhaps one of the most exasperating things the German people have to endure is the inability to obtain any reliable news concerning the progress of the war. Other countries have censorships, but it is probably more rigid in Germany than elsewhere.

Heavy penalties are imposed upon Germans found listening to foreign broadcasts, and anyone repeating to others what is heard from foreign stations may suffer death. Yet so eager are many people for outside news, it is said that they often take these risks to obtain it.

A recent article in Grit states that Germans who take such risks usually have two radios, one blaring the output of a German station and the other, tuned in softly, carrying the foreign broadcast. Sometimes a listener will repeat what he has heard to a friend, but relate it as something that came to him in a dream. But this is all very dangerous if it comes to the ears of the secret police, who spy on people everywhere.

News coming from Berlin, even through American correspondents, is notoriously unreliable, and must pass the German censors before it is put on the air. The correspondents usually quote the German sources of their supposed information, however, so that listeners may know its origin and discount it accordingly.

Reports from London are far more reliable, but they too, are censored and often omit important news which might give information useful to the enemy.

You Can't Win

Regardless of the particular activities in which we engage, it is natural that we should endeavor to look ahead, with a view to estimating the returns which may be expected.

Unfortunately, many do not look ahead at all, or if they do they fail to heed the warnings supplied by the experiences of others. This is especially true of those who decide to embark upon a life of crime.

Laying aside all moral considerations, and estimating the rewards of a criminal solely in terms of money, health and comfort, it seems strange that any should try to beat such a desperate game. Yet thousands try it and fail. They fail whether they are ever adequately punished by law or not. The daily fear of detection and punishment is often worse than punishment itself. For this reason, many give themselves up when they can no longer stand the strain.

A criminal recently captured, charged with a long list of daring crimes, speaks on the subject with authority. He says: "I am 30 years old. I began my career of crime 10 years ago. Eight of those 10 years I have spent in jails and penitentiaries. I have been shot 13 times with pistols, once with a rifle and three times with a shotgun. My left shoulder is shot away. My left arm is paralyzed from the elbow to the shoulder. One lung gone. My body is scarred from head to foot with bullet wounds. And I say: You can't win."

A Mother's Will

The will of Mary Ball Washington, mother of George Washington, is a rather quaint document, which indicates how closely she kept track of her belongings, and shows the very definite manner in which she desired to dispose of them at her death.

That portion bequeathed to her eldest and illustrious son, George, is described as follows:

"I give to my son, Gen. George Washington, all my land in Accokeek Run, in the county of Stafford, and also my Negro boy, George, to him and to his heirs together. Also my best bed, bedstead, and Virginia cloth curtains (the same that stands in my best bedroom) my quilted blue and white quilt and my best dressing glass."

To her other children and grandchildren, Mrs. Washington willed a large and fully described list of property, including her Negro man Tom, Negro wench old Bet, Negro man Frederick, and Negro woman little Bet. There were also a phaeton and bay horse, two black horses, a large assortment of household goods, including, pewter, crockery ware and iron kitchen furniture.

Mary Ball was the second wife of George Washington's father, Augustine Washington, and bore him six children, George, Betty, Samuel, John, Charles, and Mildred, in the period of 14 years between their marriage and her husband's death.

Texas Rose Festival

The state of Texas is noted for many things—for its romantic history, its size, its cattle, cotton and oil, its John Nance Garner, and other possessions for which it might well be envied. One distinction less known to the country as a whole is that the state produces more than 50 per cent of the world's supply of rose plants.

And because the far greater part of this Texas output is produced in the area surrounding the town of Tyler, in the eastern part of the state, this thriving community has had an annual Rose Festival since 1933.

This year's festival held in October was an especially notable event, to which vast crowds were attracted from far and near. Two concerts by the world famous United States Marine Band, now on tour, and the crowning of the festival queen were features of the first afternoon and evening, and varied entertainment was furnished throughout the festa.

Visitors not only saw the hundreds of rose varieties on display in the festival building replaced daily by fresh flowers, but were enabled to make tours to the fields themselves.

The annual floral parade included numerous floats of unsurpassed beauty, one alone being bedecked with more than 17,000 roses.

Early Settlers Stirred By "Fig and Plum" War

During the transcontinental railroad "irrigation war," also known as "the fig and plum war," which involved Illinois and other midwestern states in the nineties, the drive for settlers became so spirited that excursionists sometimes traveled free of fare and paid only a small charge for food.

According to an account noted by research workers of the Illinois Writers' Project, WPA, several great railroads had millions of acres of land served by large irrigation plants and promoted by hundreds of land companies. "Our land is a plum, but theirs is not worth a fig" is said to have been a common expression in the sales talk of the day.

Inasmuch as Illinois and other northern areas produced plums and southwestern sections produced figs, the remark had a passing significance.

Sidelights

Studies made at Johns Hopkins University show that 35 per cent of the children of tubercular parents contract tuberculosis, while only eight per cent of the children of healthy parents get the disease.

Enrollments in the elementary schools of the United States this fall are estimated at 21,500,000 or about one million less than those of three years ago. This is accounted for by the decreasing number of births during recent years.

At an assembly in New York City, 100 Jewish rabbis adopted resolutions to the effect that they would not seek deferment or exemption from military duty for themselves or rabbinical students, as they might do under the new conscription law.

At the beach near Dover, Eng. a British lieutenant dashed into the sea and swam 300 yards to rescue a wounded German pilot who had been shot down. Ironically enough, Lieutenant M. E. Jacobs, who risked his life to save the Nazi flyer is a Jew.

It is estimated that since 1853 Americans have contributed more than 100 million dollars for the Christian missions in Japan. A few days ago, the Rev. Toyohiko Kagawa, a graduate of Princeton University Divinity School, and Japan's most widely known Christian leader, was arrested on vague charges of violating the military code.

127 Station Lutheran Hour Network Resumes Oct. 27

ST. LOUIS — (Special). — The coast-to-coast broadcast of the Lutheran Hour will be resumed Sunday, October 27, on a network of 127 stations of the Mutual Broadcasting System. In addition, approximately 100 stations here and abroad will carry the program by electrical transcription.

Walter A. Maier, Ph.D.

The regular speaker will again be the noted Walter A. Maier, Ph. D., professor of Semitic Languages at Concordia Seminary here, whose dynamic evangelism has featured the Lutheran Hour since its modest beginning over the Mutual Network five years ago.

The first broadcast of the new series will be from 1:30 to 2:00 p. m., New York Time, over a group of stations in the Eastern part of the country, with a repeat broadcast for mid-Western and Western stations from 4:30 to 5:00 p. m., New York time.

The remarkable expansion of the Lutheran Hour has been the result of unusual listener interest and response to its message, the declared purpose of which is to "Bring Christ to the Nation." More than 200,000 letters were received from listeners during the last season of broadcasting—as many as 12,500 letters being received in one week.

A Braille department has been established to handle the increasingly large volume of mail coming from blind listeners, and the services of linguists are in constant need because of the many letters from abroad and from listeners in foreign-language groups. Correspondents range from persons high in the social, industrial and political world to prisoners in many penal institutions, miners and trappers in isolated frontier camps, and from men and women heavily burdened with life's problems.

Dr. Maier, a graduate of Boston University, Concordia Seminary and Harvard, is widely noted for the vigor and sincerity of his spiritual message, and for his strict adherence to fundamental Christian doctrine. His condemnation of Communism and other atheistic doctrines has been widely praised by clergymen and laymen of various denominations.

The Lutheran Hour will be heard regularly each Sunday afternoon throughout the fall, winter and spring. As in the past, choral music for the broadcasts will be furnished by either the Lutheran Hour Chorus or the St. Louis A Cappella Choir—the former a selected group of male singers from Concordia Seminary, the latter a mixed chorus of 60 voices.

Dinner Is Late

By WALLIS WALLACE
(Associated Newspapers.)
WNU Service.

IT WAS when Sandra learned that Marvin Miles was to be transferred to another city that she hit upon the big idea.

They had been such good pals, she and Marvin! Sunday hikes in the forest preserves, long talks sitting on the roadside, golf in the park—oh, if they had been cut out of paper patterns they couldn't have been made more for each other! But Marvin said nothing about marriage. Sandra had hoped against hope that he would. She had spent less on her lunches each day to have more for a finger wave on Saturday. She had laundered her own clothes to be able to afford perfume that he had once said he liked. She cared nothing for golf and less for hiking, but she wanted Marvin to think she was self-reliant and sturdy (quite frequently he used these words admiringly for girls he liked).

She even went so far as to ask Nellie just how Ray had proposed to her. Nellie had laughed and dodged the question.

"Ask me when we've been married ten years and I'll tell you, Sandra," she said laughingly.

Bitterly Sandra told herself that in ten years she wouldn't give a hant!

"But Ray and I are going to his sister's wedding in Cleveland, Sandra, and we were wondering if you wouldn't like to use the flat while we're gone. It's much cosier and I wouldn't have to put Boots in the kennels."

So it was arranged that Sandra should take care of the Airedale and enjoy the flat with its electric ice-box, electric range and down davenport. And into her mind sprang full-fledged the big idea; she would give a farewell dinner for Marvin at which he would be the only guest.

Now if there was one thing that Sandra could do better than any other one thing in the whole wide world it was to cook a good meal. She decided on a regular man's meal. There would be a thick, juicy steak with curls of onions resting lightly among dabs of melting butter, crisp French fried potatoes, following iced consommé. After that she would have orange ice that could be frozen in the ice-box while she was at work. Then a good cup of coffee and hot biscuits that she could toss together the instant she got in at night. That would make a good meal he would enjoy and yet one which had no elements of extravagance in it. Marvin had extolled to her time and time again the virtues of an economical wife.

In the morning she set the table with four tall candles and the crystal flowers that someone had given Nellie. It had every appearance of the four-color page illustrations of how the well-bred hostess serves, and Sandra was delighted. She asked to be excused from the office an hour early in order to prepare everything properly. It seemed too bad that it had to rain this evening above all others, but anyhow it would make a comfortable home seem all the cosier by contrast and a good dinner always tasted better on a disagreeable night!

In the lobby of the building which was generally very quiet, a veritable babble met her ears. "I don't know what John will say. He likes his dinner instantly." "I was just washing my hair and now the hair-dryer won't dry."

The poles and wire leading into the apartment building had blown down in the storm and until the men came from the power-house there would be no electricity. Sick with disappointment, Sandra went to the second floor and let herself in with Nellie's key. Her quivering lips managed by herculean efforts to keep back the sound of sobs that burst out the moment the door was closed. Marvin's very last night! The only man she had ever cared two pins for and now he wouldn't see what a fine little housekeeper she was. It just didn't seem fair—it didn't!

She tore off her blue tricotine and put on her blue silk house coat, crying bitterly. He wouldn't be here for more than an hour, but even so it would be too late. One glance in the electric refrigerator at the liquid orange mixture that should by this time have turned into orange ice brought fresh sobs. Then of a sudden she felt arms about her and whirled to find Marvin standing behind her.

"I rang and rang but you didn't seem to hear—what is it? Electricity off? Well, what of it? They'll have it on again in a few minutes, you know. That's one thing about the electric light company, they give instant service. . . . Dinner late? Well, well, well, what of that?"

He paused a moment and then kissed her suddenly.

"We—we'll probably have several late dinners during the course of our married life, Sandy," he said a little unsteadily. "Wh-what a kid you are! And there I was pretty nearly afraid of you because you seemed so self-reliant! You're just a little girl after all, aren't you? Here, let me wipe your eyes with this blue-striped towel—that one matches your eyes, Sandy, darling."

After all, Sandra thought, men didn't know exactly what they wanted. But she knew, and now she had him!

Faith In Steam Brings New Name to Village

Humor sometimes played a part in the name of Illinois communities. Parkville, the original name of which was Soonover is an example.

It seems that as late as 1876 most persons believed a stream to be essential to the operation of a grain mill. Consequently when a man came along who made mill wheels turn by steam and who brought to the place an employment boom, some doubtful neighbors declared, "Oh, it will soon be over!" Thereupon the name Soonover was given to the settlement, according to information found by the Illinois Writers' Project, WPA.

However, the mill was an enduring success, and after the community had grown to 150 persons, the name Soonover was changed to Parkville in honor of the man who had placed his faith in the practical use of steam.

Apple For the Teacher Blocked By Inspectors

"An apple for the teacher" may be traditional, but in at least some of the schools of the state, according to the Illinois Writers' Project, WPA, there was a time when this particular tradition was blocked by official ruling.

What may have caused the violation is not revealed, but for presumably good and sufficient reasons Joliet school inspectors in 1883 are reported to have declared that "no teacher will be allowed to accept a present by donations and contributions of the pupils of any of the public schools."
