Historic Cologne

Cologne, Germany, which was devastated by British bombing planes recently, is one of the oldest and most historically interesting cities of the Reich, situated on the western bank of the River Rhine near the Belgian border, and less than 300 miles from the English coast.

A Roman colony was established at the site of Cologne by the Emperor Claudius in the year 50 A. D., this being the birthplace of his wife, Agrippina. It became the capital of the Roman province of South Germany, but was taken by the Franks in the 5th century. In the 9th century it was twice devastated by enemies, and later became one of the most influential cities of the Hanseatic League, composed of German towns allied for commercial purposes. From the 13th to the 15th century Cologne was one of the largest and most powerful cities in Europe.

From the 16th century it declined in importance, and was annexed to the French republic in 1797, but after the downfall of Napoleon in 1815 Cologne was incorporated with Prussia, since which time it has become the fifth city in Germany, with a population of about 770,000 which is equal to that of Boston.

Cologne is a great manufacturing and transportation center, with extensive railway and river traffic. Its magnificent cathedral, begun in the 13th century and not completed until 1880, is one of the finest examples of pure Gothic architecture in the world. It occupies the site of a medieval cathedral built in the 9th century, which was ruined by the Normans, later rebuilt, and finally destroyed by fire in 1248. The present cathedral was begun shortly afterward. It is said to have escaped damage by the recent bombardment.

The air raid on Cologne participated in by more than 1,000 bombers and several hundred fighter planes, making an expedition at least twice as large as any ever sent over England by the Germans. The British report 44 planes lost, which was not considered excessive considering the number engaged and the extent of the damage done. In a raid of almost equal force over Essen, site of the great Krupp armament works, 35 planes failed to return. In both raids the losses were less than 4 per cent of the number participating.

Commenting on the unprecedented bombing campaign now begun, General Arnold, head of the U. S. Air forces, said in London that his conferences with the British there has "hastened the day when our air arm shall join in an air offensive against the enemy which he cannot meet, defeat or survive."

President Roosevelt has approved nation-wide gasoline rationing. It won't be long now.

British Empire armed forces suffered 183,550 casualties, of whom 48,973 were killed during the first two years of the war, London officially announced.

Sidelights

An odd coincidence brought the automobiles of Oliver Morton of Dublin, Ind., and Mrs. Oliver Morton of Fort Sill, Okla., into collision at Richmond, Ind., a few days ago. The two are not related, and they met for the first time when their cars met head-on without serious damage.

The San Francisco Aquarium has 16 baby seahorses, hatched out by their daddy, which is an old seahorse custom. The female of this species of fish deposits eggs in a pouch attached to the male's body, where they are carried until hatched. A grown seahorse is about three inches long.

When an indignant taxpayer Trenton, N. J., complained of finding tadpoles in his bath water, a city official suggested that the objects complained of might have been pieces of rubber washers. The taxpayer roared: Pieces of rubber don't swim and they don't dart away when you try to catch them. An investigation was promised.

Mayor Fiorello H. La Guardia of New York City has just received a belated reward in the form of a leather-bound testimonial from the Pratt business school. As a student at the school in 1906, he mastered the shorthand and typewriting course in 30 hours, immediately obtaining a job as stenographer at $18 a week. His salary is about $450 a week now.

A South Dakota newspaper asks these questions: "Would you tack the news of your daughter's wedding on a telephone pole? Would you use a hotel register or telephone directory to tell that you have enlarged your store? Would you put the news of your wife's party on a billboard or moving picture screen? why in heck don't you put your advertising in the newspaper, too?"

Here and There

David Curtis, three-year-old Denver youngster, tried a new stunt. He hooked his suspenders over the license plate of a car parked in a service station. Then he sat down and waited for developments. He had not long to wait. Two blocks later, the driver heard the shouts of the child's mother and others and brought the car to a stop. A hurried examination of David revealed that he was all right—except that the seat of his pants was gone and he was skinless in a certain spot.

Mrs. George L. Degener, Jr., was too busy with her Red Cross work to go to Reno to get a divorce—so she sent her husband. Explaining that she was a volunteer driver and was very busy; that an emergency might arise at any time and she would be greatly handicapped by being away from New York for the necessary six weeks, so the obliging husband, a Wall Street broker, established his residence at a Nevada dude ranch and filed charges against his wife, citing instances of extreme cruelty. Divorce was granted.

For seven years a gleaming searchlight from the twentieth floor of the Louisiana State Capitol has illuminated the tomb of Huey P. Long on the Capitol grounds 200 yards away. Not even the reform administration of Gov. Sam H. Jones has turned off the switch—but wartime blackout of the shaft of light has been ordered. The blackout of the 10-foot bronze statue of the Kingfish caused a heated debate showing the power that Long still has even in death, but a resolution to keep the light burning was defeated in the Senate by a vote of 22 to 16.

Senator Ellison D (Cotton Ed) Smith, able South Carolina Democrat, has labeled himself a "conscientious objector." Senator Smith's objections are not directed at war service, but wartime rationing—and has lots of company. He said that rationing of gasoline and trouser cuffs is all wrong and added: "Why, they even tell me that now they're taking the ruffles off ladies' lingerie. Now, who in the hell expects to win a war that way." He has started a one-man revolt after a study of the gasoline, trouser cuff and ruffle shortage.

Remember Pearl Harbor!

WHAT PRIORITIES MEAN TO YOU

A few months ago the word "priorities" was seldom heard. Today it is used almost as much as Pearl Harbor, or Douglas MacArthur, or Singapore.

To the manufacturer, the word may mean the difference between keeping his factory open and closing it down. If he can get a good priority rating, he goes ahead. If not, he has some serious figuring to do.

But the ordinary man on the street—the wage-earner, the farmer, the merchant, the professor—he, too, is affected by priorities because there are more and more things he will be unable to buy for some time to come.

So, when the average family tries to replace a worn-out machine, or material, or fixture, and learns that the item is not available at any price, that family realizes that "priorities" touch the lives of consumers and users as much as they do the makers of goods.

The point that emerges from this statement of fact is this: A way of life known as the American system made it possible for the people of this country to enjoy more conveniences and gadgets of every sort than any other people on earth.

After priorities are lifted, our people expect to enjoy them again. And to make sure of that, the average person who is now forced to do without something for the duration of the war wants to know that after the war is over the system of opportunity and open competition which gave him his conveniences in the first place shall be maintained, and that the manner of living to which he is accustomed may still be his.

THE FARMER GETS HIS FREIGHT BILL

Farm business is primarily production. Whatever the farmer grows must be sold to realize a profit.

Every farmer is separated from his market by time and distance. The less cost involved in marketing farm products, the greater share of the consumer's dollar goes into the farmer's pocket.

The present tire shortage, as it increases, will compel more and more reliance upon public transportation. That is why rural communities may now take an inventory of the demands of railway employees for increased wages, and its effect upon the cost of transportation to market.

Last year the operating railway brotherhoods sought a wage increase of 30 per cent. The non-operating brotherhoods asked for an increase of 30 cents an hour, a figure representing varying percentages of increase—practically all above 30 per cent—for the various classes involved. It was estimated that the two classes were asking an overall increase of approximately 41 per cent.

In the final settlement, operating employees were granted increases averaging 10.6 per cent and non-operating 15.6 per cent, the overall estimate being from 12 to 13 per cent.

The railroads immediately applied to the Interstate Commerce Commission for an increase of 10 per cent in all freight rates to meet wage increases. A general rate increase of 6 per cent was granted, the rate granted on products of agriculture and livestock being 3 per cent.

Almost 19 per cent of all railroad freight revenue is made up of agricultural products. This does not include freight on machinery and supplies purchased by the farmer or local dealer.

The average farm income in 1941 was $1,495.86. This figure is based upon a gross farm income of $9,119,000,000, distributed among 6,960,799 farmers. Of course the greater number of farmers received less than the average income.

Compared with this average farm income, main-line railroad freight engineers averaged, before the latest wage increases were granted, $3,227; firemen, $2,155; passenger conductors, $3,322.

In 1913, the average annual earnings of all railroad employees was $761. By 1940 the average annual wage had increased to $1,912.77. The increase awarded railroad employees in 1941, and which must also be figured in the farmer's bill, will probably make the average annual railroad wage for 1942 more than $2,000, as against the farmer's average of $1,495.86.

Inasmuch as there must be farm production in order that there may be agricultural products to transport, there is food for thought in these figures. They may provide the basis for a more equitable kind of adjustment in the future. It is too late to lock the barn after your horse has been stolen, but how about the next horse?

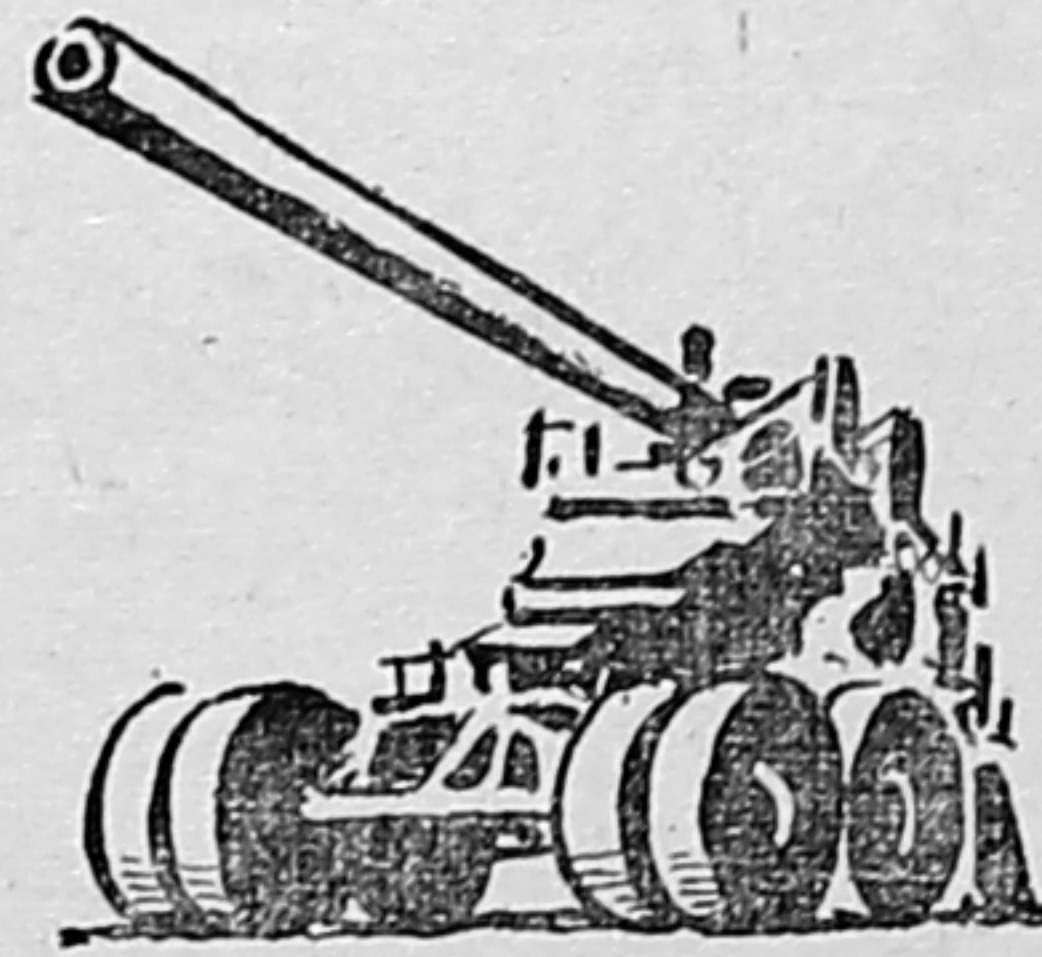

Taxing is an easy business. Any projector can contrive new impositions; any bungler can add to the old; but is it altogether wise to have no other bounds to your impositions than the patience of those who are to bear them?—Burke.

WANTS LABORING MEN TO HEAD LABOR UNIONS

From within the ranks of union labor itself comes the rather startling recommendation that labor leaders shall come from the ranks, and shall be men with adequate experience in the occupation represented by their union.

This suggestion is one of several included in a bill now before Congress (H.R. 6777). The bill is sponsored by the Railroad Yardmasters of North America, Inc. It would substantially amend the theory of the National Labor Relations Act.

This measure was discussed recently by the editor of the Railroad Workers' Journal, which is the official publication of the Yardmasters' union. The editor calls attention to the very grave danger of the two large labor groups (C.I.O. and A. F. of L.) getting into the hands of a single leader or group under the present system of union organization and operation. He suggests that as labor unions are now constituted, it would be entirely possible for such a group to raise more than a half billion dollars for which they would not have to account to anyone and with which they could debase our entire political system.

The editor of the Railroad Workers' Journal clarifies the bill in a statement covering the following six points:

1. "Only citizens of the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada would be eligible to hold office in labor organizations chartered by these nations.
2. "Labor leaders would be men from within the ranks, with adequate experience in the occupation represented by their union.
3. "Labor leaders handling the funds of their union would be adequately bonded by an independent and reputable bonding company.
4. "Labor leaders would be prohibited from using the funds of their union to promote any politician or political campaign.
5. "Each union member would be rendered a financial statement at least once per annum by an independent certified public accountant.
6. "Strikes would be illegal if pulled before the lapse of a sixty-day 'cool-off' period, and all settlements would be retroactive."

If the bill, in addition, were specifically to declare the freedom of opportunity of every American workman in his right to work, to join or not to join any particular labor organization, it would fairly cover the ground of sensible labor legislation and appeal to thinking Americans as fair and just; a distinctly forward step in labor legislation.

State Advisory Committee For University of Illinois

Eighty-six leading Illinois citizens have been named members of a new University of Illinois General Advisory Committee. Their names were suggested by President Arthur Cutts Willard and approved by the University Board of Trustees.

The committee is an advisory body to the President of the University "on matters relating to the welfare of the University, its development and services to the state, and on questions of general public policy."

Draft Boards Prepare To List 18-19 Class

Chicago, June 13—Illinois draft boards today made plans for the registration of the newest draft class, the young men of 18 and 19 from June 26 through June 30.

Colonel Paul G. Armstrong, Illinois director of the selective service, said the new draftees will be signed up at the local draft boards, instead of at school buildings. Young men who have become 20 since last Dec. 31, also will be required to register.

Seven Farmers Meet Death Using Tractors

Reports covering the first 25 days of May reveal that seven Illinois farmers met death while using tractors. It is probable, according to C. M. Seagraves, director of safety for the Illinois Agricultural Assn., that the record of eight deaths from tractors which occurred in May, 1939, will be surpassed this year. If this is true, May, 1942, will be the second consecutive 30-day period when fatalities of this type in Illinois set new all-time highs.

The majority of the tragedies occurred as a result of the operator falling from the machine. It is quite possible, Seagraves said, that back rests on the seats of the tractors would have prevented many of those accidents.

Don't Wait Until Winter

Government officials are again urging that all consumers fill their coal bins as soon as possible. There is no coal shortage, and there won't be—the coal industry is completely able to fill war demands and normal demands alike. But, if we wait until winter before ordering, a serious strain on our transportation systems will result.
