20,000 Bushels Seed Corn Burns at Camargo

Camargo—About 20,000 bushels of yellow hybrid seed corn, valued at $8 per bushel, and the plant and all equipment of the G. L. Gates Seed company here was destroyed by fire about 1:30 a. m. Tuesday.

The building burned to the ground and nothing was saved, although Gates said that everything was covered fairly well by insurance. Damage was confined to the one building, although the intense heat cracked several large windows in nearby buildings.

Fire was believed to have originated from either a short or a spark from one of two large motors in the basement. The blaze was well under way when discovered.

The building, built 71 years ago but purchased just six years ago by the Gates company, was 146 feet long and 84 feet wide, had two floors and a basement. In addition to the corn stored there, there was a vast amount of other grains and all the machinery and milling equipment.

It had been used as a bank, a department store and grocery until purchased six years ago, at which time additions and considerable improvements were made. Local manager is Brice Jones.

Jobless Payments Cushioned Shock of Conversion to War

Payment of jobless benefits relieved the shock of serious unemployment during the conversion of industry to war production, State Labor Director Francis B. Murphy announced today in summarizing activities of the Division of Placement and Unemployment Compensation for the first 11 months of 1942.

"Unemployment was a real problem in Illinois up to the end of July," declared the Director, "with almost two million benefit checks issued during the first seven months of 1942, for a total value of $25,608,083.

"How serious this problem was can be seen by comparing this period with 1941, when 1,547,211 benefit checks were issued totaling $18,489,419, a difference of more than seven million dollars."

After July, Murphy said, the number and value of payments dropped sharply with a low for the entire year reached in November. July payments totaled $5,053,968 dropping to $1,441,169 in November.

Mrs. Lydia Brown Is Hostess to L. W. Class

Mrs. Lydia Brown was hostess to the December meeting of the L. W. class of the U. B. Church on Thursday afternoon of last week.

President Mrs. Olive Rayl had charge of the business meeting, after which an exchange of gifts was much enjoyed, and from the mirth and merrymaking the class name might well be Laughing Women.

The hostess served the 4-Cs.—cake, cookies, candy and coffee.

Mrs. Leona Bergfield will be hostess at the January meeting. Members present were Mesdames Leona Bergfield, Ora Golden, Bessie Loomis, Ella Maxwell, Belle Smith, Lucy Sullivan, Olive Rayl, Olive Benefiel, Kate Stutz, Essie Shultz, Lydia Brown.

Illinois State Capitol News

Forty-four Illinois counties now have a completely organized rural fire protection program, while thirty other counties are setting up similar systems. County rural fire committees usually consist of the farm adviser, the sheriff, the county superintendent of schools, and two prominent farmers.

Illinois has just accepted as a gift from the Federal government 2,574 acres of land adjoining Pere Marquette park in Jersey County, near Grafton. The tract is equipped with fifty-two cabins, twelve lodges, and other improvements including swimming pools and bridle paths. The state will operate it as a vacation area.

The wartime demand for workers is reducing the expense of unemployment relief in Illinois. George B. McKibbin, State Director of Finance, estimates that the General Assembly will be able to cut its appropriation for this purpose for the next two fiscal years at least in half. The appropriation for unemployment relief during the current biennium was approximately $54,500,000, and it is expected that $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 of this sum will not be spent.

Gov. Dwight H. Green called an emergency conference of leading health authorities at Springfield last week to consider the crisis caused by the Federal fuel-oil rationing program. The conference recommended that fuel-oil rationing be suspended until the middle of January to allow time for revising and improving the present program. It also suggested that the minimum base temperature for figuring household heating requirements be raised from 65 degrees to a range of 68 to 72 degrees.

Big Basketball Tourney To Start Tuesday Night

A brief business meeting of the managers of the church basketball teams that are competing in the Second Annual Community Church Tournament was held Monday afternoon in the community building.

In order to prevent any misunderstanding or dissatisfaction with the manner in which the tournament is to be conducted, it was deemed advisable that the managers decide upon whatever special rules and regulations are necessary.

Each team is allowed only one practice game and the names of the contestants must be turned in before the first game. All contestants are to be admitted to the games free of charge. Because of the shortage of players and the necessity of playing the same men almost all of the game it was decided to allow five fouls and five overtimes. Each manager is to provide his own scorekeeper. A drawing to determine which teams will compete first, will be held before the first game.

The two games, two double-headers, will be played Tuesday, Dec. 29, and Saturday, Jan. 2. The games will start promptly each night at 7:30 and 8:30. Merle Buddemeier and Kenneth Martinie have been engaged to referee the games.

The winners of Tuesday's games will provide the main feature of Saturday's games. The two losing teams will play the preliminary.

The churches participating and the managers are: United Brethren, Clark Henson; St. John's, Ralph Schumacher; Immanuel Lutheran, Alvin Luth; Methodist, Jess Ward.

Admission for each double-header will be 11c and 36c. Proceeds will be used toward the purchase of much needed equipment for the community building.

Letter From Laurence Sy

Dec. 17, 1942.

Dear Joe—How is everybody in the old home town. I am feeling fine.

The weather here is still nice and warm. It looks as if we are going to have a warm Christmas down here in Louisiana.

I am driving an army truck now and I like it swell, except when driving in a blackout. I drove 30 miles through the woods without lights. It was hard to start with but after driving a few miles, it wasn't so bad. The reason for blackout driving is to get us used to driving in the dark, so that when we get in actual combat we can do it.

I have heard that we are going to Florida in January. Will let you know when we get moved where I will be located.

Pvt. L. A. Sy.

I wish to my friends
A Christmas that's Merry
In dozens of ways
And just around the corner
A year of Glad Days.

From Laurence Sy,
U. S. Army.

Allies to Use Dakar

Another development which has resulted from cooperation with Adm. Darlan was announced by Gen. Eisenhower, who said recently that French facilities at Dakar had been placed at the disposal of the Allies by Pierre Boisson, the governor general of French West Africa, who acted with the approval of Darlan.

In view of the benefits which have accrued to the Allies since Eisenhower and Darlan reached some sort of understanding when our expeditionary force reached Africa, it is difficult to understand why so much criticism has been expressed over the matter. It is true that Admiral Darlan's past record was not such as to make him particularly desirable as an ally, but neither was Stalin's before Hitler attacked Russia.

Neither the United States nor Britain made any serious objection to joining hands with Stalin when it became the only sensible thing to do. Can anyone imagine what our situation would be today if we did not have Russia on our side? And what would General Eisenhower's situation be now if the French and the natives in Africa were hostile to him?

As we see it, there was no question of choosing to deal with Darlan in preference to General de Gaulle. It just happened that Darlan was in a position to aid us in occupying French territory in Morocco and Algeria without serious resistance. Not to have accepted his aid might have placed our whole African expedition in jeopardy. Certainly it would have cost thousands of American and British lives.

Naturally our sympathies are with General de Gaulle, who has been a consistent friend all along, but he was unable to influence the French in the invasion area in our behalf. How Darlan was able to do it we do not know, but he did it, and thereby rendered an invaluable service to the Allied cause. We hope to see General de Gaulle receive suitable recognition in due time, as he doubtless will if he takes a realistic view of the situation and continues his patriotic efforts for the liberation of France in spite of his feelings toward Darlan.

General Eisenhower's statement concerning Dakar said:

"Gov. Gen. of French West Africa Boisson has agreed to cooperate with the United Nations in the prosecution of the war against the Axis.

"The governor general has proclaimed his purpose of achieving full cooperation with High Commissioner for French North Africa Darlan by placing himself definitely under the latter's orders.

"Important points in the cooperative efforts to be undertaken by French Africa are the use of airfields for transiting Allied planes and the use of ports and port facilities by the Allied navies."

The agreement is expected virtually to end the German submarine menace in the South Atlantic and to cut thousands of miles from the distance now necessary for delivery of American warplanes in North Africa.

Handling of War News

To those who had given careful consideration to news from the Pacific a year ago this month the Navy Department's recent detailed disclosure of our losses at Pearl Harbor hardly came as a surprise. One circumstance alone which followed the Japanese attack was sufficient to indicate that our fleet in Hawaiian waters had been almost completely put out of commission.

That was the inability of the Navy to send aid to our Marines and a construction force on Wake Island. After 17 days of most heroic resistance these Americans were forced to surrender as prisoners to the Japs on December 24. It seemed evident at the time that if ships, planes and men could have been spared from Pearl Harbor they would have been sent to reinforce or evacuate the besieged Wake garrison.

It is now revealed that Pearl Harbor itself was in deadly peril after the devastating raid of December 7, and that the Japanese might have captured it if they had followed up their first attack immediately. This fact was ample justification for withholding information concerning the full extent of the disaster by the authorities in Washington until the damaged ships and planes could be repaired and those destroyed could be replaced.

Everyone will agree that suppressing bad news from the war fronts creates dissatisfaction on the part of the public. It is even worse when reports are falsified in order to keep information from the enemy, but even this is sometimes necessary to avoid betraying a dangerous weakness at some point or other. In such cases the real object is to deceive the enemy, although it also deceives our own people.

The Axis propagandists deceive their own people almost constantly, not only by concealing their own losses, but also by greatly exaggerating those of the Allies. As one example it may be mentioned that up to a few weeks ago the Japanese had announced the sinking of a total of 19 American aircraft carriers, when as a matter of fact we possessed only seven when the war started, and only four of them had been sunk.

It is not believed that Washington has ever intentionally reported enemy losses other than those which actually occurred.

It is true, however, as Elmer Davis, director of War Information, admitted in a recent address, that some news of our losses has been delayed longer than necessary—such as the loss of planes and men in the Tokyo raid and some ship losses at various times.

More complete information concerning the Pearl Harbor disaster probably could have been made public several months sooner than it was, without any benefit to the enemy, but it now seems plain that it was necessary to withhold it for a considerable period of time.

The government's basic policy with respect to giving out war news is sound, and is described by Director Davis as follows: "The basic principle of that policy is that the American people are entitled to full information—except information which is not known to the enemy; and which, if it were known to the enemy, would endanger American lives, American ships, or the success of the American military operations."

Sidelights

It is reported that one of the local draft boards received the following letter: "I am married, but it's a secret because my wife's mother hates me. I have been classified as 1-A. If I continue to keep my marriage a secret, I will have to go to the Army. If I announce my marriage, I will have my mother-in-law on my neck. What do you advise?" Whether the registrant received any advice from his draft board is problematical.

Rationing of coffee and other items continue to annoy selfish persons who either do not think or do not care. Recently a lady in a dining car enroute to Chicago showed her resentment when a waiter refused to get her another cup of coffee. She gave the waiter a tongue-lashing that could be heard throughout the car. A soldier sitting nearby arose and handed her his coffee, remarking: "Madam, here's one more thing I can do for my country." She took the coffee and drank it. Whatta woman.

New words are coined daily and after so long a time they reach the dictionary. The war has created many new words but none more interesting than the name of the little demons who fill the sky-ways and who have become the friend and enemy of every pilot. Honored in song and verse and the subject

THE RAILROADS— AND FREE ENTERPRISE

In 1893, "tops" in railroad transportation was the Empire State Express between New York and Buffalo. In speed it seldom made as high as 50 miles an hour. Air brakes were new and not too reliable. It provided the best of that era in the way of equipment, coaches, chair cars, a dining car and parlor car. They were heated by steam, then a new device, and you were either too hot or too cold. The smoke and dust seeped in around every window. If any one passenger wanted a window open, all other passengers suffered from the cold, or the heat and dirt. It was a marvel of a train for its time, and to ride in its coaches you paid three cents a mile, with a higher rate in the chair or parlor cars.

Today the Empire State Express of 1893 would be a third-class local. Competition under the American system of free enterprise has encouraged improvements so that today you make the same trip on a streamlined, air-conditioned train in which you find no dirt or smoke or drafts, no extremes of heat or cold. Your train is automatically protected against accidents and travels at a much higher average rate of speed. And today you ride in the coaches or chair cars of these much superior trains at a cost of two cents or less per mile.

No other railroads in the world approach those of the United States in conveniences, facilities and carrying capacity. No others have opened up such rich frontiers or made possible the development of so many fine towns and cities and the cultivation of such vast agricultural areas.

Competition under the American system of free enterprise was responsible for improvement and growth—responsible for the building of a network of 233,670 miles of railroad which provides us with freight and passenger accommodations and gives jobs to 1,045,738 employees with earnings totaling $1,990,630,844 a year.

"CLOSED SHOP" COSTS MILLIONS OF MAN-DAYS

The time lost by workers in strikes called shortly before the United States was drawn into war would have permitted the manufacture of 37 more destroyers than were made, or 466 more pursuit planes, or 50 more super-bombers.

Seven million man-days of work for war production were sacrificed between June, 1940 and the beginning of the all-out war program. The nation as a whole lost 17,167,312 man-days of labor in the first eight months of 1941 as a result of strikes—five times as many as were lost in the same 1940 period. At that rate the loss for the entire year 1941 would be 21,458,750 man-days.

The number of strikes called in the first eight months of 1941 was 2,837, an increase of 70 per cent over the corresponding 1940 period, when 1,634 strikes were imposed upon labor in this country.

In nearly all cases these strikes represented the action of a minority, either to enforce the closed shop on the majority or settle some jurisdictional dispute between unions.

Nearly three-fourths of American workers do not belong to unions, yet they were compelled to suffer the loss of millions of dollars in wages. Besides, the strikes meant a slowdown in production for the crisis now existing, as well as higher prices for things produced.

The time lost in strikes can never be made up. Strikes waste the resources of the nation. "Voluntary cooperation" and "collective bargaining" are recognized in principle, both in agriculture and labor, but the closed shop violates the spirit of individual liberty. The right of "collective bargaining" does not mean monopoly. Labor leaders must now forget the closed shop idea and earnestly help the country win through for victory and for the preservation of the American system of individual freedom and opportunity.

'Impossible'

By DUFORD JENNE
McClure Syndicate—WNU Features.

THE words followed Mary to her room like a dooming sentence. In going down the hall of the boarding house she had passed Edith Lyman's room, and the door had been ajar. A group of girls were evidently discussing with Edith, who was a leader among them, some party planned for the evening; and Edith had said:

"Oh, we can't ask Mary! Ted wouldn't go with her—she's impossible!"

That was all Mary heard, but it was enough. She closed her door and stood in stricken silence. "Impossible"—how the word rang in her ears!

She was almost on the verge of tears when there was a knock on the door. She hastily controlled herself, and Edith stuck her bright head into the room.

"Hello, Mary, we're going out to a dance tonight, and couldn't you go?"

Mary's heart skipped a beat, but she was almost on the point of saying, "No!" for she knew she was being asked just to "fill in." But she was hungry to get away from the drab routine of her days, and said hesitatingly, "Yes, I'd—love to go, Edith."

"O. K., then, Mary, Ted will take you."

Mary sat still a moment—Ted, one of the most welcome of the boys who came to the house, whose kindly, attractive face always had a pleasant smile for Mary.

She dressed as carefully as she could, and she was ready when Ted came.

On the journey to the dance hall, through the crowded subway, Ted's kindness and thoughtfulness pleased her and drove away some of the chill the word "Impossible" had left.

At the hall, she entered into the spirit of the evening with all her soul, warning herself that this chance might not come again.

When the evening was over, however, and Ted had left her with a kindly good-night and in the silence of her room she "took stock" she was aware that he had shown no more than courteous interest in her.

"And I was so happy with him! If he would only ask me again!" she whispered to herself.

But he didn't, not that week-end, nor the next; and in the meantime, Mary brooded on the word that had condemned her so simply.

Finally, in desperation, she went to motherly old Mrs. Ober, who worked in some dressmaking shop, and told her the whole story.

Mrs. Ober listened, and said gently:

"Then, listen, my dear. Every girl has something of charm about her; and it is her duty to study in every way she can to bring it out. Now your—your dresses ought to be changed; it's not a matter of cost but of right choices. You see, some women have a gift for figuring such things out; and some haven't. Now, it's my business to help those who haven't; and suppose we see what we can do?"

Mary's eager agreement made the older woman smile, and they went ahead with their plans.

So the day came when Mary, while Mrs. Ober looked on with interested eyes, faced herself in her mirror in a real party dress. She was amazed at the change. Her bobbed hair had been changed in such a way as to bring out the oval of her face and the curve of her slim neck; and the dress, simple enough in design, did the rest.

"You see?" Mrs. Ober said, and Mary turned and rushed into her arms.

Things seemed to happen after that. She was hurrying down the hall to Mrs. Ober's room for the purpose of having a small change made in the dress when she met Ted at the top of the stairs. He looked at her with sudden, keen interest.

"Hullo, Mary, I hardly knew you! What is that—a new dress?" he asked with frank admiration in his eyes.

His glance set something to singing within her. "A real party dress!" she announced, as she slipped by.

Then came Edith's comment later on. "Midget, where did you get that bob? It's the work of an artist!" Then, happiest of all, came Ted with his own invitation to join him and his own special group at an evening dance.

It was in the quiet of one of the alcoves of the beautiful room outside the dance floor that he turned to her. "Mary, you are the same girl and yet you aren't, and I can't figure out what has made the difference. You remember the other time? I enjoyed having you with me then, but I feel now as if it were almost somebody else." He was smiling, but his ways were frank and he could not hide his puzzled thought.

Mary was chanting to herself, "I won't be lonesome any more," but she said to him: "The reason—oh, only a woman knows! But you don't think I'm 'Impossible'?"

He caught her hand in a tense grasp. "Impossible!—I should say not—and it's going to take a darned good man to get you away from me!" he said with decision.

Only Human

By EDGAR T. MONFORT

"YOU certainly have a wonderful little daughter, Macbreath. Looks like a flapper, but isn't. Nice and sweet. Sort of old fashioned in her manner toward men. That's what I call a fine girl."

Macbreath flicked the ashes from his cigar and looked out at the velvety golf course that stretched away from in front of the Westview Golf and Country Club and slipped off into the trees in the distance.

"Emily's proved a theory I've always had," Macbreath said after a moment. "I'm certain in my own mind that fathers make the best mothers. It's the women who make flappers of their daughters. Now, I've raised Emily since she was ten, brought her up to be a man's sort of girl, taught her to obey me in everything, always to consider my wishes, but I've been careful to let her see my reasons for doing things; why I think my opinion best. Now, most girls choose their own boy friends, go with whom they please, but that isn't Emily. I know exactly whom she's going to marry. Of course, it may be years from now. I hope it will be, but he's a fine fellow, has money and position and all the qualities a husband should have. No crazy running off with the chauffeur or some little counter jumper in my family—just because he happens to wear his clothes wonderfully or looks like Clark Gable . . ."

She got interested in a fellow when she was off at school, Jim Atworth. It was pretty serious and he came down to see me, but I knew it would never do. The boy's a fine, clean fellow, but he has nothing and probably never will have, not much social position either, I imagine. I talked to her about it and she was perfectly reasonable, gave him up without a word and has been running around with a dozen others since."

"It certainly is wonderful to have a girl like that," said Montgomery slowly. "Now, my Margaret almost snaps her fingers in my face if I try to tell her anything; in fact, I'm honestly afraid of her. She says her life's her own and she'll live it to suit herself and those who don't like it can lump it. And petting parties, good Lord!"

"That's another thing Emily never does," said Macbreath with satisfaction. "We got confidential the other night on the porch and she told me that she never had kissed a man in her life."

Macbreath looked at his watch and went to his car. Montgomery left also for a bit of golf. The little group had scattered.

As the high powered imported machine purred along the boulevard that was flanked by magnificent lawns and shrubbery Macbreath's mind was still on his daughter Emily. He was proud of her; but more especially of himself, for having made such a good job of her upbringing. She was on a par with the other experiences of his life, he reflected; he had finally controlled everything with which he had come connected.

Emily met him at the door and after giving him a daughterly peck on the cheek danced over to the radio and tuned in on some jazz.

"That's a hot song, isn't it, dad?" she laughed, tossing her slimmness into a chair and languidly turning the pages of a movie magazine. "What'd you old fogies talk about out at the club 'safternoon? I bet it was about women."

"It was about—you," said Macbreath, remembering the conversation with returning pride and satisfaction.

"Well, that was an innocent enough topic," she confessed, "but what did you say about me?"

"Nothing of much interest . . . I guess I'd better go up and get ready for dinner."

After dinner Macbreath went back to his club and bridge. Emily had a theater date she explained, so she would not be lonely.

When Macbreath returned late that evening the house was all in darkness. Emily was already in bed, he decided. He went straight to his room and prepared for the night. As he threw back the covers of his bed his eye struck a note pinned to his pillow and quickly taking it to the light he read:

Darling Dad,
Don't think I don't love you because I just dot on my precious old foggy dad, but by the time you read this Jimmy Atworth and I will be married and speeding away on our honeymoon. I know you didn't approve of him but I did—so we just decided to take the plunge. There was no use trying to reason it out with you because you never change your mind, so I'm doing like I've always had to do; say yes, dad, then go and do as I please.
I love you heaps and bushels and Jimmy and I'll be over to see you soon.
Devotedly,
EMILY.

When Macbreath had finished reading the note he dropped into a chair and held his head while his world of illusion tumbled down around his ears. After a long, long time he got up and crawled to bed. "Oh, well," he said to his pillow with a wry smile, "human beings will be human, but I bet they rag me to death at the club tomorrow."
