British In Tripoli

When Marshal Rommel decided not to make a stand at Tripoli with his fleeing Africa Corps recently, that ancient city fell to the British, and with it the last of Italy's African empire, of which it had been a part since the Italo-Turkish war of 1911-12.

The region now known as Libya was formerly called Tripoli, but the latter name is now generally confined to the city, which is the capital of Tripolitania, the western portion of Libya.

After being successively in the hands of the Phoenicians, Romans, Vandals and Greeks, Tripoli was conquered by the Arabs in the 8th century, and the population has since been predominantly Moslem. Tripoli was held by the Spaniards for a few years in the 16th century, after which it was given to the Knights of St. John, who were expelled by Turkish corsairs in 1553.

Tripoli achieved independence in 1714, and Tripolitan and other Barbary pirates were the scourge of the Mediterranean for many years. Several nations of Europe sent their fleets against

OWIGN TO CRUSH THE AXIS

OF COURSE we have it!-and the anxious Axis knows now, and too late, that America has the POWER to win. They know THAT power is not alone the strength of valiant allies or of fearless fighting Yanks-but is also made of sweat of war production workers, of civilians toiling, farmers tilling.

For Victory is made of stuff like that-AND dependable ELECTRICITY which SPEEDS ALL TASKS essential to the better way of living which gives Americans the spirit and morale and POWER to crush the Axis.

CAM SHEPARD was the logical suspect for the crime. Sam had borrowed $15,000 from old Mrs. Hodges, and had given her a note for the amount. Mrs. Hodges was a real estate operator and maintained an office on Fay street in Bridgewater. According to the secretary, she kept all her business papers in a safe at the office, but according to the secretary, she had taken Sam Shepard's note home with her on Tuesday night.

Mrs. Hodges lived out in the country in Barstow.

Wednesday morning she was found dead in bed, killed with a knife. The $15,000 note was missing.

On the Monday before, Sam Shepard had left the distant city of Hayden and driven by automobile to Barstow, arriving Tuesday afternoon about four o'clock and registering at an inn operated by a Mrs. Bean. He had gone directly to his room and retired, first telling Mrs. Bean that he was terrifically tired after his long drive. At eight o'clock that evening he had waked, dressed and set out for a walk in the country, returning to the inn about midnight.

He admitted being in the vicinity of Mrs. Hodges' house.

Inspector Otis Jackson, assigned to the case, learned these things before he called on Shepard. Mrs. Saunders, Mrs. Hodges' housekeeper, gave him the added information that Mrs. Hodges had pleaded a headache upon returning home on Tuesday, and had gone immediately to bed, without eating any dinner.

Inspector Jackson got in touch with authorities in Hayden. They and Mrs. Hodges' office secretary provided him with this information: Sam Shepard's affairs were in bad shape. He hadn't been able to keep up interest payments on his note. If Mrs. Hodges foreclosed he would be ruined. He had no particular reason for visiting Barstow in the middle of the week.

Jackson assembled all this information, sorted it out, thought about it and then went to the inn where Sam Shepard was staying, and questioned him.

"Why did you come to Barstow in the middle of the week?"

"For two reasons. First, my health was in pretty bad condition as a result of financial worries. Second, I wanted to have a talk with Mrs. Hodges. I owe her $15,000. I was going to ask her to extend the note for three months."

"Did you see Mrs. Hodges on Tuesday night?"

"No. I retired the minute I arrived here. I waked at eight o'clock, dressed, walked out to the Barstow place, found it dark and so returned to the inn and went to bed."

Inspector Jackson looked at the young man thoughtfully. "You're pretty frank about all this."

"Why shouldn't I be? I have nothing to hide."

"Did you contact any one at all before you retired, after reaching here Tuesday night?" "Yes. I called Mrs. Hodges' office in Bridgewater. Her secretary answered. She said Mrs. Hodges hadn't been feeling well and had gone home early."

"Is that all?" "Yes."

Inspector Jackson didn't arrest Sam Shepard. Instead he had a talk with Mrs. Hodges' secretary.

"When Shepard called did you tell him Mrs. Hodges had taken his note home with her?" "Why, no. Why should I?"

"That's the point. You wouldn't in the general course of things." Jackson next day visited Mrs. Saunders, the housekeeper. "Did Mrs. Hodges tell you she had brought Sam Shepard's note home with her from the office before she retired on Tuesday night?".

"She didn't tell me nothin', except that she had a headache and was going to bed without her dinner."

"Were you here all evening?" "Nope. Mrs. Hodges told me could have the evening off, so I went over to see my sister, Minnie."

'And what time did you get

"About seven o'clock this morning, in time to get Mrs. Hodges' breakfast." The buxom lady shuddered. "It was me who found her,

"Of course," he said, "the one who killed Mrs. Hodges was the secretary. I've sent a man out to pick her up."

"But hold on! How do you know? Sam Shepard had the only motive. Why would the secretary want to

Second Wife

By R. H. WILKINSON Associated Newspapers. WNU Features.

IFE began for Lionel Ainsley when he met Cynthia Trumble. She was the fulfillment of dreams that were dreamed while he sat alone by his camp fire in the wilderness, while he listened to the hoots of owls and the screeches of bobcats and wondered if the time would ever come when somebody sat with him by the fire and listened to the night sounds that had been his only companions since graduation from the state school of forestry two years

He met Cynthia when he came out of the bush one June for a short vacation. From the first there was an understanding between them. They were married the day he was due to start back into the woods.

Lionel didn't know how it happened. He remembered telling her about the forests and the strange night noises and the sound of water lapping against the side of a canoe, and the sunsets and sunrises-and she had been thrilled.

The first week was deliciously sweet. Cynthia had been a country girl and because Lionel was her first real love, she eagerly looked forward to spending weeks alone with him in the wilderness.

That was before they reached Woodsville, where Lionel had his base. There was a big packing company at Woodsville, run by a man named Benton, who had a son named Austin. Fresh from college, young Austin had come to Woodsville to learn the packing business. Quite naturally the place was dull and boring to one so sophisticated.

Then Lionel and his new wife arrived, and Austin looked on Cynthia and vowed to know her better. Austin had that polish about him that attracts women. He was an experienced young man, and when he smiled at Cynthia she felt instantly that irresistible desire to play with fire. It was a desire she couldn't quite explain. She knew only that after a week in the wilderness with Lionel she wanted to see people, to laugh and play and be gay. But most of all she wanted to charm young Austin Benton with her beauty.

So when Lionel finally headed his canoe toward Woodsville to replenish their supplies, Cynthia's pulse quickened a little, and she kept her eyes fastened on the bend in the river that would first reveal the great buildings of the packing house.

What followed made Cynthia a little ashamed. She hated to hurt Lionel, he was so fine and generous and kind. And so devoted. She thought he'd object to a divorce, and it was a little disappointing when he agreed readily.

She saw the hurt look in his eyes | and almost hated herself. Then she thought of young Austin, and she knew that the shame and hurt and pity would all vanish once she was again in his arms.

And so Lionel went back into the wilderness shortly after the divorce was granted, and Cynthia, free and exultant, waited for Austin to come

He came at last and stood near where she lay in the hammock. It was night and she could not see his face.

"Cynthia, darling, why did you do it? I feel like a cad, breaking up you and Lionel like that. He's good sort and-well, I meant nothing by my attentions. It was all—well, sort of fun."

"But, darling, you do love me? You do want to marry me?" Misgivings chilled her heart.

Austin ran a finger under his collar. "Well, you see, Cynthia -you see, I can't, that is-I'm already married!" Cynthia nearly swooned. When she again opened her eyes Austin was gone. She was alone. Alone! No one to go to, no one to help her, no one to love her. Panic gripped her, then fear. Later she thought of Lionel. She had not known how to appreciate him. She'd wait. He'd be out of the bush again in three weeks. He'd understand. He was so big and fine and generous.

It was almost unbearable, that waiting. The people of Woodsville looked at her curiously and whispered among themselves. Three weeks passed and Lionel didn't return. Another week dragged by and still no sign of him. Her funds were nearly exhausted.

Then, at last, Lionel came back.

Cynthia, watching from the veranda of her rooming house, saw his canoe sweep into sight, and her heart leaped. Lionel at last! Lionel, whom she'd loved and would love again. Lionel who had loved her so tenderly. Love like his didn't die. She had treated him miserably, but she'd admit all that, ask his forgiveness.

And then the canoe neared the shore and Cynthia went down to

Basil, the Man

By BARBARA BENEDICT Associated Newspapers. WNU Features.

RASIL WINTHROP'S father had ized his life, superintended his doings. Basil was an only child. His mother was dead.

His father was wealthy and generous, so why not let the old man run the show? Basil thought.

He ceased to think thus when he met the girl with the red hair and blue eyes. She was selling kisses at a U.S.O. bazaar. Five dollars a kiss. Basil only had thirty dollars in his pocket, but he stretched out the six kisses that amount would

"I-er-don't know her name." arranged a dinner party for tomorrow. You'll meet Elaine then."

But Basil didn't meet Elaine then. For the first time in his life he felt the electrifying qualities of manhood warming his blood. Instead of attending the dinner party, he held a clandestine meeting with the redhead. They had a swell time together. By mutual and silent agreement they decided not to confide to flu. each other their identity.

Winthrop, senior, was furious. He called Basil on the mat. But Basil stuck out his chin and orated in his own behalf. He felt like he'd had a shot in the arm, and because the feeling was new and thrilling, his defiance amazed the old man.

"Son, I can't understand you. Something's happened. You don't need to tell me what it is, but if you continue to ignore my wishes, I'll be forced to take such drastic steps as firing you from your job, from whooping-cough. cutting off your allowance, disowning you, striking your name from my will."

"Swell!" cried Basil. "Then I'll be my own man, free to do as I like, with no obligations."

When Basil heard about the arranged meeting he came to a decision. He would meet this Elaine and tell her in front of his father that he loved another. Then he would keep an appointment with the red-headed girl and propose marriage. That, he decided, was the only manly thing to do, and Basil had suddenly become a man.

She had red hair and freckles and buck teeth. She was about the homeliest looking creature Basil had ever seen. Moreover, she giggled. Basil didn't wait for the dinner to get under way. He made his speech then and there, then headed for the door. His father accompanied him into the corridor.

"Son," said the old man, "forgive me. I didn't know what I was getting you into. Go marry your red-head. She couldn't be any worse than that."

"Thanks, dad," said Basil. And he went off and kept his date with the red-head, whose name, it proved, was Mary Smith. He proposed and she accepted and they lived happily ever after,
