George Allen Magers Wins Scholastic Honors

George Allen Magers, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Magers, Homer, has overcome a sizeable handicap to win scholastic honors at Eastern Illinois State Teachers college, Charleston.

Magers, who is totally blind, had an average which was almost straight 'A' during the first semester at Charleston, and for his entire collegiate career has an average only slightly under 'A.'

He is a transfer from Illinois college at Jacksonville, and prior to that graduated from Illinois School for the Blind, also at Jacksonville, in 1941.

Mrs. Delia Nohren Is Hostess to G. T. Club

Mrs. Delia Nohren entertained the G. T. Club at her home on Thursday afternoon of last week. The afternoon was spent in playing "500," with Mrs. Louise Zenke winning high score.

The hostess served chicken salad on lettuce, potato chips, ritz crackers, olives and coffee, and favors were sweet pea corsages.

Guests were Mrs. Eva Colom and Mrs. Eva Walker.

The following members were present: Mesdames Jennie Nohren, Eva Boyd, Irene Wiese, Lillie Bowman, Bertha Cook, Mary Dicks, Gladys McClelland, Zermah Witt, Freda Maxwell, Ruth Henson, Hilda Zenke, Louise Zenke, Freda Limp, Rosa Smith, Neva Frick, Ida Messman, Olga Sailor and Delia Nohren.

Girl Scout News

The Lonette patrol of the Girl Scouts hiked to St. John's church last Saturday afternoon. Three girls, Doris Thomas, Joan and Mary Rose Donley, with the help of Mrs. Frey, laid the trail by placing signs of rocks, sticks and colored yarn along the way. Later, the rest of the patrol, led by Edna Schumacher, followed the trail to the Church.

Games were played while the fire making committee built the fire. Later, the supper of potatoes, scrambled eggs, toasted cheese sandwiches and cookies was enjoyed by all. The patrol hiked home about five-thirty.

Letters To The Editor

U. S. Army Air Corps,
2nd Provisional Co.,
Stockton Ordnance Depot,
Stockton, California.

Hello Joe—Received last issue of the paper and liked it very well. Would you mind to print my address, as I like to receive and answer letters.

I'm in a class of Army auto and truck mechanics. We are supposed to make minor repairs and all replacements. But we have to know how to "keep 'em rolling" under all circumstances. This course is normally fourteen months long but we finish it in three. Is it any wonder it's called one of the "miracle schools of the army?" I leave here May 1. The weather is fine here and I hope the mail is also that way. I hope to see you all soon.
Stanley Shultz.

Illinois State Capitol News

"Enjoy your nearby state parks this year" is the wartime slogan of the Illinois Division of Parks. With long vacation trips out of the question because of rubber and gasoline shortages, vacationists are being encouraged to take advantage of the recreation spots within reasonably short distances of their homes.

Governor Dwight H. Green has issued a proclamation designating Tuesday, April 6th, as Army Day throughout Illinois. He urges all citizens to display American flags and to join in showing their appreciation of the heroic job the Army is doing. Army Day, which is observed nationally, is sponsored by the Military Order of the World War.

Illinois farmers plan to increase their spring plantings by more than one half a million acres over the areas planted a year ago, the Illinois Cooperative Corporation Reporting Service of the state and federal departments of agriculture announce. Corn, soy beans, oats and hay are the big four of Illinois spring planting constituting about 98 percent of the total acreage. Corn, with a prospective 7,400,000 acres, represents about 45 percent of the expected total spring plantings. Soy beans, with 4,216,000 acres, represents 22 percent of the spring crop acreage. Oats ranks third with 3,392,000 or 17½ percent of the total.

Saturday of this week is the last day for filing applications for the next examination for Guard positions in the Illinois State penal institutions. Men who are between 25 and 60 years of age, at least 5 feet, 7 inches tall, weigh at least 150 pounds and have the equivalent of a grade school education are urged to file their applications with the Illinois State Civil Service commission by April 3.

Starting salary for guard is $120 a month plus maintenance, and is automatically increased to $132 plus maintenance after three months.

Full details concerning the examination may be obtained from the State Civil Service Commission, Springfield, or from U. S. employment offices.

U. S. War Casualties

With the beginning of real offensive action in Tunisia the people of the United States may expect to see a marked increase in war casualties, particularly in men killed in action. The current United States News gives some figures concerning American losses from December 7, 1941, to March 18, 1943, which show the following:

Killed, 11,003; wounded, 12,442; missing, 38,129; prisoners, 8,456—a total of 70,030 casualties of all kinds.

No information or estimate is given as to the fate of those listed as missing. All of the 8,456 listed as taken prisoners belonged to the Army. Losses of various arms of the service were: Army: 4,253 killed; 7,815 wounded; 25,029 missing; 8,456 prisoners.

Navy: 5,181 killed; 2,183 wounded; 10,893 missing.

Marine Corps: 1,518 killed; 2,425 wounded; 2,030 missing.

Coast Guard: 51 killed; 19 wounded; 177 missing.

Although the Army engaged in prolonged fighting against the Japanese, its list of known dead is smaller than that of the Navy. This is doubtless accounted for by the fact that a large percentage of the Navy's dead went down with their ships.

No late figures concerning the Merchant Marine losses are yet available, but the number killed and missing up to last December is given by the World Almanac as 3,244, most of the missing presumably having been drowned.

According to German and Japanese figures, 3,138 American civilians were interned in those countries during our first year of the war.

Before the war is over the foregoing figures will look small, and every person capable of aiding the effort on the home front will bear a share of responsibility for the final result.

Hitler Shows Up

The long silence which Adolph Hitler imposed upon himself during the successful Russian offensive was broken recently when he made his first radio speech since the German disaster at Stalingrad.

In the meantime persistent rumors had been circulated to the effect that the Nazi leader was suffering from a breakdown, that he had gone crazy, and that he was dead.

It now appears that he was biding his time until some sort of German success afforded him an opportunity to sound off again with somewhat less embarrassment than he had been laboring under in recent months. This opportunity came with the recapture of Kharkov and the Nazi drive into the Donets basin.

When Hitler did reappear he had little of importance to say, except to explain that he had been busy on the Russian front, and that plans had been made to insure ultimate victory for Germany. His words were not such as to inspire much confidence on the part of the German people, however, for he painted a terrifying picture of what would happen to them if they lost the war.

There is still much speculation as to whether Hitler or his general staff is really directing present German strategy, but since making his speech it has been rumored that he has ordered the Axis forces in Tunisia to follow the example of the Army of Stalingrad in fighting to the last. In any event, it seems probable that the Nazi monster may live to plague the world for a good while to come.

Move to Obtain Sugar For Home Canning

A move to obtain sugar for canning of Victory Garden products without surrender of ration stamps has been made by the Illinois State Council of Defense in behalf of Illinois housewives.

At the same time steps were taken to seek the release of additional steel for the manufacture of pressure cookers and home canning equipment.

Both steps were taken by Lester J. Norris, chairman of the council's Victory Gardens committee, who sent telegrams to OPA and WPB officials.

Norris wired Price Administrator Prentiss M. Brown:

"Urge that housewives be allowed 15 pounds of sugar for each member of the family, with no forfeiture of any ration points for home canning and preserving this year, provided understanding or pledge is made by the housewife that sugar will be used for this purpose. It is of vital importance to save all the food possible and prevent waste through home preservation."

Norris said he expects the produce from Victory Gardens to be double that of last year and that his wire to the OPA administrator in Washington was sent with that thought in mind.

While most vegetables are canned without sugar, some women like to use a small quantity of it in tomatoes. The heavy demand for sugar, Norris said, will come with the preserving of fruits and the making of jelly.

Norris said the greater part of the cookers allotted to Illinois will be used in community canning centers. The Victory Gardens committee, assisted by the council's women's division, is planning a program for a statewide establishment of canning centers outside the metropolitan area.

Illinois led the nation last year with 600,000 Victory Gardens and Illinois women canned 90,000,000 quarts of fruit and vegetables as a result.

Household Hints

Sprinkle a generous amount of coarse salt over rugs before sweeping them.

Grass stain on white clothes can be removed by washing the stain in pure alcohol.

Dip a wet cloth into baking soda and rub it on white enamel ware to clean the enamel.

Buttons will stay longer on children's clothing if a small button is placed back of the one to be used and sewed through both buttons.

A small amount of vinegar or lemon juice added to the rinsing water used for shampooing the hair will make the hair clean, glossy and soft.

Wash materials will not fade so badly if dipped into a solution made of 2 tablespoons of salt, 1 tablespoon of ammonia, 1 tablespoon of turpentine, and a gallon of warm water. Dry in the shade without rinsing.

Do You Know Illinois?

By Edward J. Hughes
 Secretary of State

Q. When was the World's Columbian exposition of 1893 first proposed?

A. 1885. Directors of the Chicago Interstate Industrial exposition passed the resolution: "Resolved, that it is the sense of this meeting that a great world's fair should be held in Chicago in the year 1892, the four hundredth anniversary of the landing of Columbus in America."

Q. When was the "World's Fair Exposition company" organized?

A. 1889. Organized by Chicagoans with a capital stock of $5,000.

Q. When was the Field Museum incorporated?

A. 1893. Marshall Field established it with a collection based on specimens left behind from the World's Fair and housed in the Art building of the exposition in Jackson Park, Chicago.

Q. When was the present Field Museum constructed and where was it located?

A. 1915-1918. In Grant Park, Chicago.

Q. What is housed in the rebuilt Field Museum building in Jackson Park, Chicago?

A. The Rosenwald Museum of Science and Industry.

Q. What forms the nucleus of the exhibits in the Museum of Science and Industry?

Q. What was the battle of Campbell's Island?

A. A battle against Black Hawk's band of warriors fought by Americans at Campbell's Island, six miles east of Moline, during the war of 1812.

Interesting Notes

The management and workers in a small Detroit war plant believed that their fellow workers, now in the armed services, should share in their war prosperity. Each week a $25 war bond is purchased for each employee who is in the service by the Advance Plating Company, the management paying one-half the cost, the employees the other half. Six former employees are now receiving these bonds.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur has many admirers, but none more ardent than Richard Allen Miller, ten-year-old Seattle youngster. Richard wrote a letter to the distinguished leader in which he inquired about his health and paid him a deserved compliment as to his military ability. He ended his letter by saying: "I will like you forever. Yours truly, Richard Allen Miller." Back came an answer: "Thanks, Allen. I like you too. Douglas MacArthur."

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Melnick of Santa Rosa, Cal., do not completely trust their local scrap harvesting committee, or so it seems. Owners of a brass mortar and pestle and a copper mixing bowl which had come into the possession of their family 162 years ago, they desired to donate them to the war effort but were afraid if they reached the community scrap pile someone might grab them off for their value as antiques. So, instead, they sent their prized possessions to President Roosevelt as contributions to the successful prosecution of the war.

Annual Town Meeting and Election NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN

To the legal voters, residents of the Town of Ayers, in the County of Champaign and State of Illinois, that the Annual Town Meeting and Election of Officers of said Town will take place on being the First Tuesday of said month.

The polls will open at 6 o'clock A. M., and will close at 5 o'clock P. M., on said day in the Community Building.

The Officers To Be Elected Are:

- One Supervisor.
- One Commissioner of Highways.
- One Justice-of-the Peace.
- One Constable.
- One Board Manager of the Community Building.

The Town Meeting for the transaction of miscellaneous business of said Town will be held at the hour of 2 o'clock P. M. on said day at the Community Building, and a Moderator having been elected, will proceed to hear and consider reports of officers, to appropriate money to defray the necessary expenses of the Town and decide on such measures as may, in pursuance of law, come before the meeting.

Given under my hand this 22nd day of March, A. D. 1943.

Farm Girls

By R. R. WILLS

Associated Newspapers.
WNU Service.

IT WAS a swell idea and quite novel. Beulah and Candida had met in the New York office of Mortimer and Brown, attorneys. Both were stenographers. They became fast friends because they found something in common. That something was a desire to live on a farm in the country.

They talked about it incessantly. Then Beulah came through with the great idea.

"Let's work hard and save for a year. Then let's pool our resources, make a down payment on a small farm and—live there!"

"But we don't know a thing about farming. We've both lived in the city all our lives. We couldn't make it pay."

"We could," Beulah said, "if we wanted to badly enough. There are books on how to do everything these days. Of course, if you're doubtful—"

"I'm not. I'd love to try it! Oh, I think it would be grand!"

So for a year the two girls worked and saved. They spent evenings on end at the library reading books on small-scale farming, and they hunted through the papers every day for bargains.

When spring came they took a week-end and drove up into the country and called on the farmers who had offered their homes for sale. The second place they visited proved exactly what they wanted. It was a small, white, tree-shaded house with a barn, a henry containing a flock of 100 birds; a cow, a horse, a pig and several cultivated acres. The price was high, but Beulah had a sharp business head. She talked to old Mr. Naaman, and old Mr. Naaman finally agreed to take their savings as a down payment.

It was a swell idea. It proved to be the fulfillment of the girls' dreams. Best of all, what with the sale of eggs and fowls and milk and raising their own vegetables, they made a profit. The enterprise would likely have developed into something lasting, had it not been for Barnaby Xerxes.

He was a radio singer, suffering from a nervous breakdown. He had come to Hillside to recuperate. Beulah met him one day on a deserted section of country road. He was walking and she gave him a lift back to town in the delivery truck.

Three nights later Barnaby came out to the farm for dinner.

Beulah was thrilled. During the days that followed she hated going out evenings and leaving Candida home alone, but, obviously, Barnaby and she couldn't take the other girl everywhere with them. After all, young lovers want to be alone once in a while.

Beulah was wondering how, when Barnaby proposed marriage and she accepted him, she was going to break the news to Candida. Poor Candida.

Two nights later Beulah delivered a half dozen fowl to the village church for its semi-annual supper, and was returning home earlier than she was expected. It was dark when she swung into the drive. Lights were on in the front room and through the window she saw Candida in his arms, kissing her. And Candida seemed to like it.

Beulah was furious. She stormed into the house.

"You—you vixen!" Beulah shrieked.

Well, it looked like the end of the female partnership. A week passed. The girls went about their duties without speaking. Barnaby, being wise, stayed away. Both girls knew that sooner or later they would have to come to some agreement about the farm. They hated the idea of giving it up. But it was silly to think about keeping on under the present circumstances.

So Beulah made arrangements with Lawyer Stearns and one evening the girls set out in the delivery truck for his law office to write the final chapter in the adventure that had given life a meaning for both of them.

They were silent on the drive to town. Even when the lights went out for no explainable reason neither of them said anything. Silently Beulah got out, lifted the hood, discovered a fuse was blown, and having no spare, tried to produce a makeshift from a hairpin. She tried for quite a while without results. It was inky dark. Candida sat in the truck and was silent. She knew nothing about mechanics. It began to look as though there was nothing to do but continue on foot, when suddenly the connection was made and the lights flared up.

"Oh!" exclaimed Candida, clutching the truck door. She was staring up the road. In the glare of the headlights a man and a woman, evidently having come up in the darkness without knowing of the truck's presence, were standing in close embrace. Startled, they remained like a tableau for a moment, before leaping apart.

The man was Barnaby Xerxes. The woman was a girl about town whom both Beulah and Candida knew by reputation.

"Oh, shucks!" said Beulah, "let's go back and milk the cow and call it a day."

"Oh, let's!" cried Candida happily. They did.

Nice Men

By EMILY SPEARE

Associated Newspapers.
WNU Service.

BARBARA had written to Marjorie Hanson, down in Georgia, telling her that there were loads of nice men in New York. Barbara had an apartment big enough for two, moreover she had a good job that she was in no danger of losing, and it wouldn't cost much more to feed two than one. "And so, my dear," Barbara wrote, "I want you to stay with me for at least six months and forget."

For lack of anything better to do, and because of her genuine affection for the downright Barbara, Marjorie left the town where she was still referred to as "poor Mrs. Hanson" and came to share the three small rooms that Barbara called home.

As usual Barbara had the situation well in hand with plans well formulated by the time Marjorie arrived.

"You were just eating your heart out down there in Georgia," she told her. "Not because you really care about Fred Hanson but because every one feels sorry for you. You're still young and unusually good to look at and it will be just too bad if you don't marry again. Me, of course, I'm different. But the only way you'll ever really forget the mess of a time you had with Fred Hanson will be to marry some man you can really love."

"But men like that are pretty scarce nowadays," Marjorie insisted; "at least down home they are—"

"There are plenty of them up here in New York," Barbara told her. "I never bothered with them till I began planning for you but I've been making a collection recently and after you have time to unpack and get your bearings I'll ask them around. But of course you will be Miss Stone, not Mrs. Hanson. Not that they'd mind that you've been married before," Barbara hastened to explain, "but because it might be that some of them had heard of Fred Hanson, and maybe it would get back to him that you were here and he might take it into his head to look you up."

"There's no chance of that," Marjorie assured her friend. "If he'd gone off with another woman there's a chance he might get tired of her and come back. But after he and my brother quarreled he became perfectly unreasonable. Naturally he couldn't expect me to take his side against one of my own blood—"

"It was all a terrible mistake," Barbara interrupted. "What I want you to do is to forget all about it."

Four months later Barbara admitted ruefully that the "loads of nice men" she had promised in New York hadn't materialized quite as she had expected. "Either they are terribly tiresome and have money enough to support a wife—"

"Or they are terribly tiresome and haven't," Marjorie finished the sentence.

"They aren't all tiresome," Barbara insisted. "You don't think George Lorrimore is tiresome, do you?"

Marjorie reflected for a moment. "I don't believe George is tiresome. George is pretty nice—and George thinks I'm pretty nice, but if George doesn't get any further than that, Barbara dear, I'm either going to get a job—which seems to be impossible—or go back home. I can't bear sponging on you any longer."

"You're anything but a sponge," Barbara told her. "We can live along this way as long as you like, but if you really do want money of your own, why don't you accept one of the checks Fred Hanson sends you?" Marjorie insisted that she'd never take a cent from Fred Hanson and that in the future his brief letters with check inclosures would be returned unopened.

Marjorie was looking forward with more than usual eagerness to meeting George Lorrimore that evening. Marjorie and Barbara and George and a friend of George's invited for Barbara. Dinner on the Astor roof and then, instead of lingering to dance, back to George Lorrimore's luxurious little apartment.

Barbara patiently listened with well-feigned interest to George's friends' comments on golf, bridge and the stock market for an hour or more while Marjorie and George lingered on the balcony. And it was not until Marjorie insisted that she and Barbara take a taxi alone back to Barbara's apartment that Barbara realized that the task of making Marjorie forget had not been accomplished.

"You two were certainly having a serious conversation," Barbara began as they sped home. "I thought perhaps—"

"So did I for the first five or ten minutes," said Marjorie, and then after a pause. "George has been married before. You knew that. He has pretty serious views on marriage. He thinks people ought to be happy. But his first wife had been married before. Apparently she'd never got over it. He thinks women are all like that. No matter what they say or do—still true to their first love. He really thinks that and that's why he wanted to marry me, because he thinks I'm so young and sweet and unspoiled—"

"What did he say when you explained?" asked Barbara.

"I just told him he was right . . . and then I changed the subject and came in and told you it was time we went home. Barbara, I want you to write a letter for me tonight to Fred Hanson. Tell him I want him to come back."

PEGGY DANFORD didn't find out that she loved Roger Linsley until she had refused him and he had departed for a canoe trip in the Canadian wilderness, leaving no address behind him. Which seems rather stupid of her.

As a matter of fact, Peggy's "No" had been tentative rather than final and no one was more surprised than she when it was accepted as final.

So here she was now, this beautiful morning in late September, dashing down the stairs at the postman's ring in the hope that at last some word from Roger might be waiting for her.

But there was none. "Looks like your ticket applications, Bill."

"Righto. Well—we'll take in the big game, anyhow."

Now disappointment in love affects the female sex in various ways. Some fly to desperate flirtations with other men; others withdraw into moody seclusion shunning contact with the world until recovered.

Peggy did neither, but, as she moved about on her usual round of pleasure, she found a strange reaction taking place within her. Love for Roger began to turn into positive hate. Peggy came to crave a meeting that she might show him how little she thought of him.

November arrived with its colorful pageant of autumn foliage. And with it came memorable Saturday afternoons when stalwart evelens waged their hectic battles before the cheering multitudes.

Peggy and Bill were in their seats for the big game. Soon the seats all around them were filled. But one on Peggy's right remained empty until the game had started.

She subconsciously knew someone had taken the empty place, felt the presence of another, but so wrapped up was she in the exciting game that she paid no attention to her neighbor.

During intermission when the cheering was thunderous, Peggy, her eyes blazing with the excitement of the game and the November breeze, turned quickly—and looked straight into the familiar once-loved gray eyes of Roger Linsley.

There was a moment of utter silence between them, none the less intense for the thunderous cheer around them.

Then: "Imagine an explorer at a football game!" Peggy's heart was doing strange things and she was going to make it behave if she had to be downright nasty to Roger. "You remember Bill?" she asked, as Roger remained silent. But when she turned her brother had disappeared.

"Oh, yes—Bill!" Roger stared at the empty space. "Must have shrunk—I really—don't see him."

Peggy flushed. That was the trouble with Roger. He thought he had a sense of humor.

"He was here a moment ago."

She turned to scan the crowd. "I really must see Bill. He was so interested in my trip. You know when I wrote him about the fishing he said he wanted to make just such a trip some day."

Peggy stared at him. "You—wrote—Bill?"

But Roger was suddenly talking steadily, tenderly.

"See, here, Peggy darling. That trip was planned just to give me a chance to think things out. You see, I had been trying for two years to the best of my ability to earn your love. I failed. I had a faint hope that absence might prove more my advocate than my presence evidently had. I had had it out with Bill. It seems there was a chap—some one named Burton or Barton—who seemed to be the favored one. Bill was quite sympathetic, but he didn't think I had a chance. He thought my trip a splendid idea—for my own good—if nothing more. I'm leaving tonight. I still love you too much to enjoy seeing you with someone else. Strange," he added with the whimsical smile that did strange things to Peggy, "that we should be seated together!"

Peggy caught her breath. This was fate. She forgot all the nasty things she had planned to say. All the cutting remarks that had been piling up for weeks.

"You can't—you wouldn't have gone without seeing me?" There were tears in Peggy's eyes.

"Bill told me you were so happy and gay, that you couldn't have missed me," Roger said.

"Girls don't wear their hearts on their sleeves any more," Peggy stormed. Stupid Bill!

"Do you mean—that you care?"

Roger was holding her hand tight.

Hanging over the fence, Bill grumbled. "And I gave up a day getting that seat for Roger—at least a week making certain he would return in time for the game—spent $10 in bribes to see that he got here, lie to 'em both—and then don't dare return to my seat because they'll both think me responsible for their past unhappiness."

But he might just as well have returned. For neither Peggy nor Roger would have known he was there—as they were unaware that the teams had come in quite some time ago.

Man Of Substance

WARREN A. REEDER
McClure Syndicate—WNU Features.

JOHN HARDNER stopped at the door of Kane and Lord's offices and bade the night watchman a calm goodnight, which had been his unvarying routine for the past twenty-four years.

Then he stepped over the threshold of the doorway for the last time. Kane and Lord were losing a trusted cashier.

And they were also losing seventy thousand dollars in cold cash.

In the small room he had rented only that morning he started to transform his appearance with deft, sure movements. In a half hour he stepped back from the mirror and viewed himself with satisfaction. His iron-gray hair was now a dark brown, parted on the side instead of the center. The Van Dyke beard he had cultivated so carefully for the past five years was gone and he was clean shaven. Altogether he looked fifteen years younger.

In the small restaurant in the warehouse district he deliberately ate a large meal. When he finished it was quite dark.

Paying for his meal, he picked up the suitcase he had brought with him and walked out slowly. Then he started to hurry through dimly lighted streets and alleys until he came to the spot he had selected a long while before. It was in the shadow of a huge warehouse at the river's edge.

Swiftly he divested himself of his outer suit and donned an extra one from his suitcase. He changed his shoes.

Then he gathered together his discarded clothing. The pants, shoes and shirt he tied together in one bundle, weighted it down with small pieces of lead and dropped it over the pier into the dark gurgling waters of the river.

The coat and hat he laid on the pier. In the pocket of the coat he placed a note. It read:

"I cannot stand the disgrace of being convicted for embezzlement. This is the end."

The next morning he casually perused his paper as he ate breakfast. The screaming headlines amused him:

TRUSTED CASHIER SUICIDE!
Carefully he read the account. The police were dragging the river but did not expect to find the body because of the swift currents and treacherous tides.

What to do with the money was a problem. After long deliberation he decided to place it in a safe deposit box. He selected one in a quiet suburban bank and stored all of it away except a few hundred dollars for immediate use.

John Hardner's wants were few. He lived comfortably but avoided the bright lights. His one vice was playing the horses.

In the latter part of the summer he took a long trip up into the North woods. He did not especially enjoy himself but he felt that it was a gesture his position demanded.

At the end of six weeks John Hardner came back to civilization feeling more physically fit than he had for years.

His first thought was of his stored wealth. He climbed into a cab and ordered his driver to take him to the bank. When the driver drew up in front of it John Hardner stared at the building curiously. At one side of the bank a group of workmen were busy bricking up a hole in the wall. His heart commenced to throb alarmingly.

"What happened there?" he asked the driver. "An accident?"

The driver stared. "Ain't you heard? That's where that gang broke into the safe deposit boxes about five weeks ago. They got everything—" Suddenly the driver realized that he was talking to empty air.

John Hardner rushed into the bank president's office. "My money," he gasped hoarsely. "I want my money!"

"Here—take a seat, my man," the president advised kindly. He motioned him to a chair. "I suppose you mean the safe deposit boxes?"

John Hardner nodded, still fighting for control of himself.

"Now—you needn't worry. We're paying all claims. All you have to do is to advance your claim and sign the necessary papers." He pushed a button. To the secretary who appeared he spoke a few words. Then, to John Hardner, "I'm afraid I didn't get your name."

"Roget. Edward Roget," John Hardner said colorlessly.

"Roget." The president paused. "Ah, yes—Roget." He scratched a few words on a piece of paper and handed it to the secretary.

An hour later at police headquarters a young detective leaned over the desk sergeant's shoulder. "I see that they caught that Hardner fellow—the one who was supposed to commit suicide. How'd they do it?"

The desk sergeant looked up interestedly. "Funny about that. They took fingerprints on all those safe deposit boxes trying to find out the gang who did it. They found Hardner's prints on the box he'd rented. He plumb forgot that Lord and Kane make all their employees be fingerprinted when they first go to work for them. He'd been there twenty-four years—but fingerprints never change!"

Leonora

Leonora straightened the objects on her desk with great care. She had put her desk at the end of her room facing the door so that when her mother came in she would have to cross the whole room under Leonora's stern executive eye to get to her. From movies and pictures in the newspapers Leonora had gotten a good idea of how the desk of a busy woman of affairs should look.

With an important scowl, Leonora picked up a sheet of paper. Now she was two people—herself, the busy woman, and her own stenographer. "Miss Simpkins, take a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, will you?" she murmured under her breath.

"Yes, immediately," she murmured back at herself.

Leonora cleared her throat and looked at the ceiling for inspiration. Miss Simpkins bent over the sheet of paper hanging on the words about to fall.

"Dear Mr. Morgenthau," "Got that?" "Yes, madam."

"I am—ahem—thirteen years old and anxious to be of all possible service to the country at this time, ahem!"

"I earn a weekly income of from $1.37 to $2.12 by helping with the housework and by shovelling snow. I am at present in possession of one War Savings Bond and am buying stamps weekly. I want to become a member of the 10 percent Club. I feel it to be—ahem—not only my duty, but my privilege." "How do you spell privilege?" asked Miss Simpkins. "Don't bother me with these details," said Leonora—my privilege as an American to invest at least ten percent of my income in War Bonds.

"Yours truly," "Get that off at once, Miss Simpkins," said Leonora. "Yes, Ma'am! You certainly are an important woman, ma'am," said Miss Simpkins.
