Danville Man Wounded on North African Front

(Danville Commercial News)

Maj. Wayne R. Cook, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cook, 108 Nicklas Ave., Danville, has been wounded in action in the North African area according to word received here.

A telegram from the War Department advising of his being wounded May 8, was received by his wife, Mrs. Maryla K. Cook of Chicago, who until recently made her home here with the Cooks.

Major Cook only recently was pictured in the film, "Prelude to War," at the Fischer Theater, the picture of his company presumably having been taken while he was stationed in Ireland.

Major Cook who has been in the service since March, 1941, when he was commissioned a first lieutenant, has been overseas the past year. While still in training here he received a promotion to captain. He sailed for Ireland last Mother's Day and prior to going to Africa with the initial convoy last November was promoted to the rank of major. When wounded he was serving on the 1st Battalion headquarters staff.

He was active in ROTC at the University of Illinois where he was graduated in 1934 following his graduation in 1930 from Danville High School. Before entering the service he was employed as an assistant buyer with Montgomery Ward's in Chicago.

(Editor's Note—Major Cook, who is a nephew of Mrs. Arch Walker, has visited in the Walker home here a number of times and is known by a number of local citizens.)

Rev. James S. Ferris Finishes Year's Work

On last Monday afternoon a familiar car moved slowly along the main street of our town. The back seat was piled high with books, typewriter, suit cases and various things. In the front seat a smiling young man was waving and calling farewell greetings to each and every passerby on the street. Preacher Jim was leaving us.

A year ago the Annual Conference of the Methodist Church assigned to the Broadlands and Longview churches, a student minister, Rev. James S. Ferris, but to many of us, and especially to the young people he was soon known as Jim, or Preacher Jim. He at once took both of these churches and both communities to his heart and set to work to make his stay among us a useful and happy one. One of his first activities was the organization of a Boy Scout Troop. Then with the help of Rev. Frey of St. John's Church and Rev. Mumaw of the U. B. Church, the young people of the community were organized into a Christian Fellowship Group which meets each Sunday night at alternate churches, and is doing some very worth while Christian work.

Then under his able leadership, church attendance and interest has increased and in many respects the church is stronger today than it has been in many years. Having a winning personality and a great love for people, Rev. Ferris has gone freely into most of the homes of these two towns and communities, church and unchurched, and soon gained the love and respect of all. This charge would have tried to retain him indefinitely but for his decision that it was his duty to enlist in his country's service, and he is entering as a Navy Chaplain. So our loss will be the Navy's gain, and when we think of the lonely, home-sick lads he will cheer and comfort, we can give him up more readily.

But we doubt if any man, after only one year's residence in a community, has gone away with the love, good wishes and prayers of more people following him, than our Preacher Jim.

A potluck supper was given in honor of Rev. Ferris at the Methodist church last Friday evening, a large crowd of friends being present.

Rev. Ferris preached his farewell sermon here last Sunday morning at 10 o'clock. Members of the U. B. Church postponed their Sunday School until 11 o'clock so that they might attend his last service, which so greatly pleased him. There were also a number present from the St. John's and Immanuel Lutheran churches.

Robert L. Peterson Declared Deceased

Grover C. Peterson received the following letter Monday from Frank Knox, Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C., concerning his son, Robert Lee Peterson, missing in action, since May 7, 1942:

June 5, 1943

Mr. Grover C. Peterson Broadlands, Illinois
My dear Mr. Peterson: After a full review of all available information, I am reluctantly forced to the conclusion that your son, Robert Lee Peterson, Seaman second class, U. S. N. R., is deceased, having been reported "missing in action" on the 7th day of May 1942, being a member of the crew and serving aboard the U. S. S. Neosho, when that vessel was sunk as a result of enemy action in the Coral Sea.

In accordance with Section 5 of Public Law 490, 77th Congress, as amended, your son's death is presumed to have occurred on the 8th day of May 1943, which is the day following the day of expiration of an absence of twelve months.

I extend to you my sincere sympathy in your great loss and hope you may find comfort in the knowledge that your son gave his life for his Country, upholding the highest traditions of the Navy. The Navy shares in your sense of bereavement and will feel the loss of his service.

Sincerely yours,
Frank Knox.

Big War Production

War production figures disclosed by OWM Director James F. Byrnes in a radio address recently are very impressive, showing that in spite of all the confusion and bickering which has existed on the home front the United States has in fact become "the arsenal of democracy."

One of the most gratifying statistics given by Mr. Byrnes was his assertion that the 100,000th airplane produced under our war program came off the assembly line Monday, May 31. Other figures given for production were the following:

In the first five months of 1943 one hundred fighting ships were completed for the Navy which was one every 36 hours. Most of these were doubtless escort vessels for use in the anti-submarine campaign, but this is the type of combat ship most needed at present. It was stated that during this year we will double the size of our fleet, but this probably means a doubling of the number of ships, rather than a doubling of tonnage. It is hardly conceivable that the number of battleships and cruisers now in service could be duplicated in a single year.

Mr. Byrnes said we were now building merchant ships four times as fast as they are being sunk, which also appears to be on the optimistic side, as it has been admitted that last year the Allies lost more ships than were built. In the 12 months ending Monday we have built more than 1,000 cargo ships and nearly 100 tankers.

In three years our factories have supplied nearly 45 million bombs for our airplanes and those of our allies. We have made 100,000 anti-aircraft guns and turned out one piece of artillery for every 45 men in the Army. In the term "artillery" is probably included small airplane cannon and other small-caliber guns, in addition to field artillery pieces.

Speaking of future developments in the war, Mr. Byrnes said:

"We have at length caught up with the Axis in our preparations and are rapidly forging ahead. We are now girding ourselves not for a single attack on a single front, but for many attacks on many fronts, both in the European theater of war and in the Pacific."

He warned, however, that we have a long, hard road ahead, and the hardest fighting is yet to come." He also took a crack at civilian officials who allow personal disputes to hamper the war program, saying:

"The people have a right to expect government officials to sacrifice all pride of opinion, and cooperate just as officers of the Army and Navy are required to cooperate. I pledge you that I shall do all in my power to bring about the same coordination of efforts among civilians in government agencies that exists on the military fronts."

If Mr. Byrnes can do that he will prove himself to be one of the outstanding figures in this war. The country will wish him success in his tremendous task.

Sidelights

Flood waters of the Mississippi river played a mean trick on Sam Bishop. As the water was rising in his cabin, Bishop busied himself in removing of articles from a dresser drawer before he took his departure. He stopped in the midst of his task to light a cigarette and then turned to resume his work. But—the dresser had floated out of the room.

"It's easier to find a lifeboat at night in the middle of the Atlantic than to buy a pair of shoes in this town," was the complaint of James Walker, a 28-year-old seaman, returned to Bayonne, N. J., after being rescued shoeless from mid-Atlantic when his ship had been torpedoed. Walker had walked a mile barefoot, hunting for a pair of shoes after being landed from a rescue ship. He had no coupon and no store would solve his problem until finally he was directed to the ration board, which came to his relief. Walker splurged—he bought a $15 pair of shoes.

Spinach has been stricken from the menu at the Millington Naval Air Station, near Memphis. And at the same time the garbage collection has been cut in half. Lt. E. J. Anspach, Jr., of the naval station, reported that 1,400 pounds of spinach has been served each week and the men threw out half of it. Other leafy greens went the way of the spinach and now most of these vegetables have been taken from the menu, Lieutenant Anspach said. A move for food conservation in all armed service camps, stations, posts and fields is underway and the elimination of foods the men refuse to eat is a part of the campaign.

It's a long way from Guadalcanal to Memphis—but a wrist watch belonging to Pfc. Leo M. Schneider, Jr., of the Tennessee city, has made the journey. It seems that the Memphis marine lost the watch last January as he leaped ashore. It was found in February by a marine captain, who turned it over to a Red Cross worker in a San Francisco hospital. As the watch had no inscription on it, the Red Cross worker, Virginia Benham, traced it from manufacturer through the wholesaler, distributor and jewelry firm and finally to Schneider's parents in Memphis. The watch, in good shape, is being held for its owner, who is still a trifle busy with pressing matters in the South Pacific.

Henry Simmons, negro farm laborer of Macon, Ga., was convicted in Judge A. M. Anderson's court on a charge of driving an auto while under the influence of liquor, and received an unusual sentence. Having in mind the shortage of farm labor, Judge Anderson fined Simmons $220 and added that for the next 10 months he must spend his nights and Sundays in the Houston county jail and work each week day on the farm. Simmons will continue to draw his farm pay but must liquidate his fine at the rate of $5 per week until the full $220 is paid. If Simmons fails to report for his farm work, his sentence is changed to full-time prison confinement.

The young Negro recruit was the victim of so many practical jokes that he doubted all men and their motives. One night while he was on guard, the figure of one of the officers loomed up in the darkness.

"Who goes there?" he challenged.

"Major Moses," the officer replied.

The young Negro scented a joke. "Glad to meet yuh, Moses," he said cheerfully, "advance and give de ten commandments."

Visiting Vivian

By STANLEY CORDELL
Associated Newspapers.
WNU Features.

THERE was no rejoicing in the Barber family when the letter came from Aunt Vivian Randall, announcing that she was arriving that evening for a short visit.

"Short, my foot!" Asa Barber stormed. "That woman doesn't know the meaning of the word. She'll stay a month and make a confounded jackass out of herself with her alleged jokes. Ethel," he raged at his wife, "I won't have it! Either write and tell her not to come or I'll—I'll make her want to leave!"

"I can't write," Ethel told him. "She's already on her way." Mrs. Barber's face wore a distracted look. Tomorrow Aaron Colt of the Wear-better Tire Co., was arriving to talk about the possibility of establishing an agency in New England.

"Jack Turner's got the measles," Bruce Barber, fourteen-year-old, announced brightly, "and nobody can come to see them."

Asa banged the table. "Measles! That's it! One of us will contract the measles! Fun-loving Vivian will throw a fit, won't even stop to unpack her bags. To make doubly sure, we'll get that half-witted young friend of Helen over here to give a concert on his saxophone."

The idea might have worked except that Aaron Colt arrived a day earlier than he expected and fifteen minutes before Aunt Vivian. Bruce, thinking the ringing doorbell was an announcement of Aunt Viv's advent, appeared with a face so thickly bespeckled with paint daubs that the whiteness of his skin was barely visible. Aaron Colt stared at him and blinked.

"Good lord, boy, what's that on your face?"

"Measles," said Bruce innocently and proudly.

"Measles! Wow! And I've never had 'em! At my age they'll kill me!" He started for the door, just as Asa appeared.

"Mr. Colt! How are you? You're earlier than we expected. Come in! Come in and be comfortable."

"Barber," said Aaron Colt sternly, "what's the idea of inviting me to your home when your boy has the measles?"

Just then Asa caught sight of Bruce and almost swooned. "Good gosh!" he ejaculated, then tried to pass it off as a joke, and instructed the bewildered Bruce to wash his face. Aaron Colt was skeptical, but agreed to remain.

Things were progressing smoothly when Vivian blew in. "Blew" is the correct word. Vivian always appeared places as though a gust of wind had propelled her there. Now she took one look at Aaron Colt and he at her, and they flew into each other's arms. It developed, much to the chagrin of the Barber family, that the two were old friends and that Aaron thought Vivian was a howl.

Directly after dinner Asa managed to get Mr. Colt into his study and practically convinced him that the tire agency could be placed in no better hands. In fact, Aaron was about to sign on the dotted line when from outside the window came a blaring and shrieking that would put a squawking hen to shame. Mr. Colt flew into a rage. There was, it developed, nothing that annoyed him more than saxophone playing. He was on the point of leaving when Vivian appeared carrying a saxophone.

"You know," she said brightly, "I've been taking lessons for ten years and I can't play the saxophone yet."

"Why not?" asked Aaron.

"I took piano lessons," said Vivian and Aaron practically collapsed with laughter.

Vivian finally announced that she and Aaron were leaving and were going to be married. The Barber family was too stunned to speak.

Career Woman
 By R. H. WILKINSON
 Associated Newspapers.
 WNU Features.

PORTIA had repeatedly told him he would be smart, and happier, to forget her and marry someone else. Ivan had at first laughed at her, then pleaded with her.
 "I could never be happy with anyone but you. I love you. You know that."
 "You may love me now. Later, you'll stop. No man can be happy with a career woman. I want to paint pictures more than anything."
 "You can!" he cried. "I'll never stand in your way. You can have your career and me too."
 She laughed, shaking her sleek, blonde head. "Forget me," she said. "I'm not the only girl in the world. You could be happy with someone else."
 "I couldn't. I could never be happy with anyone else. I'll never forget you."
 They continued to see each other. Portia thought it would be less cruel than not to permit him to call. Besides, at times when he wasn't making love to her, he was fun. He was fun and it also flattered her vanity. That was natural. Every girl, career or not, likes to be told she is beautiful, likes to know that she is loved. Ivan never let her down.

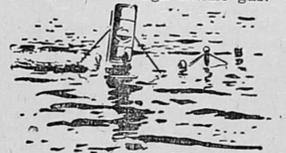

If she thought he would get used to her, cease loving her, she was wrong. He became more ardent. Frequently he went on business trips, remaining away two, three and sometimes seven and eight days. He always called her the moment he got back.
 "I thought of you every minute I was gone. It was torture being away. Will you marry me?"
 "Oh, Ivan, you mustn't! You mustn't continue to think of me this way. You must meet someone else."
 "Why do you keep saying that? There's no girl in this world as beautiful as you, as lovely as you, no one I could care about. You know that."
 "It sounds wonderful! It sounds romantic and glamorous, but it isn't so. I'm practical enough to know that. There will be another girl. Sometime. I'm sure of it."
 "There won't. Ever."
 It became a habit. She expected his ardor; accepted it. Automatically she would make the same replies and he the same answers. Then they'd have fun. It was pleasant. Portia didn't mind. She enjoyed it. She could still devote the greater part of her time to painting, to her work, her career.

Another month passed. Then something happened. Portia woke up to the fact that she wasn't cut out to be an artist. It had been a growing feeling in the back of her head for months. The reality came as something of a shock. The thought that all her effort, all her future planning was for nothing rather dismayed her.
 Yet she faced it bravely. Better to admit defeat now than to go on and on, groping, sliding back, experiencing defeat. Better to forestall all that now by being sensible.
 She thought of Ivan. With a little shock she thought of him. She remembered all the times they had had together, all the things he had said, his vows, his ardor. And suddenly it flashed across her mind that it had been this career that had stood between them, that had caused her to overlook the true significance of Ivan's regard to her.
 Now that she saw vividly what lay beyond. She loved him. She had loved him all the time. The barrier—her career—had been false.

Her heart quickened its beat as she looked into the future—a bright, sparkling future with Ivan, having fun, being told she was beautiful and perfect.
 She became eager. Tomorrow he was returning from Chicago. He would call her. She would meet him as usual. He would present his old argument, expecting her customary reply. Then she would tell him the truth, withholding nothing, admitting the falseness of the barrier that had stood between them.
 She smiled, thinking of the expression that would come into his eyes. The telephone rang at five minutes after five.
 "Meet me at Tony's for dinner. I can hardly wait."
 "Of course. I'm glad you're back. It will be fun seeing you again." It was a proud that she had been able to keep her voice the same.
 She arrived early, sat down in the lobby, lighted a cigarette, picked up a magazine. She mustn't let him know at once. He mustn't read it in her eyes. She must wait until he became ardent, when they were seated at their cozy, customary table.
 She heard his voice before she saw him. She looked up from the magazine's fashion page.
 He was standing directly in front of her. He was grinning. Beside him was a dark-eyed girl.
 "You were right. I felt you were right all the time, but couldn't bring myself to admit it." He turned to the girl. "Here she is. The other girl. The one I can be happy with. We've been married a week. I've told her all about you. She's dying to meet my—career woman."
 Portia rose. She was very proud of herself. She extended her hand. "Congratulations. Best wishes. I'm glad—so glad."
 But her heart was breaking.

What You Buy With WAR BONDS
 Battle of the Atlantic

A sinking smokestack, a great air bubble, an empty lifeboat, all that is visible of a torpedoed tanker, all that is evident of the hard work, the savings we put into War Bonds to build this tanker, to load it with 50,000 gallons of high octane gas.

Our money is still safe but the tanker is lost forever. Another and another and another must be built to take its place.
 The men who sail the seas are giving their lives to win the Battle of the Atlantic. We are asked only to lend our money.

University of Illinois Newspaper Collection
 One of World's Best

One of the world's important newspaper collections, and the greatest in the West, is located in the University of Illinois library. Here on row after row of shelves are 20,000 volumes of more than 700 different newspapers. Each volume is as large as a full newspaper page and is several inches thick.

The file of Illinois newspapers is the largest in existence anywhere, and that of foreign language papers printed in America is the largest in the nation. The Illinois paper file includes 7,636 volumes of papers from 100 counties. The foreign language section includes 3,661 volumes of 315 different publications.

Of the 225 Illinois newspapers for which complete files of the last 25 years or more are in this library, no similarly complete files of at least half are in any other library. Of some, not even the publisher has as complete a file as that at the University of Illinois.

HOME-CANNED BERRIES
 TAKE LITTLE SUGAR

Home canned berries play leading roles in the pantry because they contribute vitamins and minerals for health, can be used in many ways, and are easy and inexpensive to can.
 Blackberries, blueberries, boysenberries, raspberries, elderberries—can them all and others, too, with little or no sugar. Sugar gives them better flavor and more calories, but has nothing to do with keeping qualities.

Berries are too precious to waste and none will be wasted if you will see to it that every step taken is the right one. First of all, wash, rinse and examine your jars. Be sure to inspect the top edges of those to be sealed with glass top seal or two-piece vacuum seal closures because top seals refuse to work unless tops of the jars are perfect. Cover jars, glass lids, and zinc caps with luke-warm water, heat to boiling and keep hot until needed. Wash and rinse rubbers and vacuum seal lids and drop them in boiling water—they don't need boiling unless you plan to do old-fashioned open kettle canning—then they must be boiled a few minutes to sterilize.
 Every berry must be fresh, sound, ripe, and firm. Wash them carefully and then take your choice of canning methods.
 Gladys Kimbrough, Home Service Director of Ball Brothers Company, prefers to hot-pack berries. This is how it is done. Place berries in a wide, shallow pan; add one-half cup sugar, or less, for each quart of berries; set the pan over low heat and simmer until the berries heat through and the sugar dissolves (remember you don't have to use any sugar); pour the hot berries into clean, hot jars and process five minutes in hot water-bath canner.

If you prefer cold packing, fill a jar about half full with raw berries, then tap it gently on a folded cloth to shake the berries down. When the jar is filled to within a half-inch of the top, add enough hot syrup to cover the berries. Process 20 minutes in a water-bath canner. Syrup for four quarts of berries may be made by boiling two cups sugar and three cups water or berry juice together until the sugar dissolves. If you are a little short on sugar—and who isn't these days?—try making the syrup of one measure sugar, one measure corn syrup, and one-half measure water or berry juice. This syrup seems rather thick and sweet, but it will become thinner and less sweet after it has been with the berries a few weeks. And if you have no sugar at all, cover the berries with hot berry juice or boiling water; seal or partly seal the jars (follow the manufacturer's instructions) and process 20 minutes in a water-bath canner.

TEMPERATURE "SAFETY ZONE" PROTECTS CREAM

The temperature "safety zone" of cream has been pretty well established by dairy experts, and the farmer who is careful to hold his cream while on the farm within its prescribed limits will have eliminated one of the principal causes of poor and spoiled cream.

As indicated in the above illustration, cream should not be cooled down to below 32 degrees—the freezing point. Freezing changes cream so that it yields a mealy, oily, undesirable butter.
 But neither must the cream temperature be permitted to go above 60 degrees. You merely invite trouble when you let cream stand after separation instead of cooling it down immediately to under 60 degrees—if possible, under 55 degrees. There are some bacteria in milk even as it comes from the cow's udder, and there is nothing bacteria and molds thrive on and multiply in so well as warm milk or cream. Only quick cooling can put a stop to this multiplication on the part of the bacteria and preserve the quality of the cream.

 No less than in summertime, it is important right now to keep cream held on the farm as cold as possible—without letting it freeze. Keeping cream in a milkhouse or a cool place indoors is most helpful. Where a spring or other running water is available, the problem of cooling and holding cream is easily solved by piping water to the milkhouse and allowing it to flow continually through the cooling tank. On farms where running water is not available, the cream should be placed in a tank of fresh water where it will not freeze and which can be emptied when the cream is removed. Covering the cans of cream with a heavy blanket will protect them from the cold while being hauled to market.

Skillful Hands Needed, Too
A change in our system of education that runs sharply counter to the thinking of the majority of our parents and their children in the past two decades was recently advocated by the American Youth commission, a group of distinguished citizens appointed by the American Council on Education.

In its report, the council suggests that "we abandon the mistaken notion held by many parents who assume that the only road to a higher social and economic status for their children leads through the traditional academic, college preparatory curriculum."

The commission urges the elimination of subjects of less importance in order that occupational adjustment services may be added. It lays greater importance upon the practical at the expense of what has been called the cultural.

The job of our schools is to best fit our children for a job in life; we need men who can work skillfully with their hands just as we need men who can work skillfully with their brains.

Increased drilling activity and decreasing production in the oil fields of southern Illinois are revealed in the May report of the State Geological survey. Wildcat drilling proceeded at a higher rate than in any month since last fall and resulted in extensions of producing areas of seven established pools. One 800 barrel well was developed in Clay county.

Illinois oil production for May is estimated at 6,719,000 barrels, compared with 7,097,000 barrels in April. Estimated total production from January to June 1 is 35,279,000 barrels. Last year in the same period it was 49,485,000 barrels.
